They spent the day with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gillespie and all vote them the most royal entertainers.

Eye Trouble Explained
 Dr. Ervin L. Sells, an authority on the eye, writes: The time is not far off when the "movies" will be obliged to discover some method of giving color to the pictures. As it is now, the crude light vibrations are CERTAINLY causing nervous headaches, partial paralysis of the optical nerve and disorders within the center of the brain of every individual attending these shows.
 The whole secret of these nervous disorders lies in the fact that the intense white rays of light producing these pictures are totally lacking in color, and the distress is not caused, as is erroneously supposed heretofore, by the "flicker" of light on the screen. The principle is the same as snow blindness, dizziness and other disagreeable features caused by traveling over a field of snow in the bright sunlight.
 I have found that over fifty percent of the people who suffer from nervous headaches are frequenters of the moving picture shows, and will say, to avoid these serious eye troubles and nervous conditions, that amber tinted lenses should be worn, which will remedy this very serious trouble that is coming on us all until the theaters remedy this fault themselves.
