PASTEURIZING MILK.

In Bulletin 166 of the department of agriculture the question of the pasteurization of milk at low temperatures is taken up somewhat fully. As a result of a number of experiments carried on the department chemists recommend pasteurization by bringing milk to a temperature of 145 degrees F. and holding it there for thirty minutes. By this method the chemical changes are so slight that it is unlikely that the protein content or phosphate of lime and magnesia are rendered less digestible than in raw milk. When pasteurized at the lower temperature it was found that the bacteria that survived were largely lactic acid organisms that play an important part in the souring of milk. From the standpoint of heating and subsequent cooling, pasteurization at the temperature mentioned was found to be the more economical method.
