SUSPECTED.
We dwell together, you and I,
The same, in outward seeming,
As when we first in years gone by
Saw Hyman's torments glancing.

THE SEEN AND THE UNSEEN.
There were watchers by the bedside,
And also in the room;
There was morning light and shadow,
From a night of troubled gloom;

A Little of Everything.
Some months ago the people of Pendleton were said to be opposed to the Indians' agreement to the terms of the Slater bill.

It is when evil doing is made somewhat respectable by custom that it is most insidious in its encroachments upon good morality, and is the most difficult to combat.

Some people pretend to hold a hypocrite in holy horror. They pretend further that they have more respect for the man who is loud and above board than for a hypocrite.

Some people are silly enough to imagine that it is a mark of superiority to sneer at the pleasures and pastimes of small towns, and to intimate in a superior kind of way that their esthetic souls are pining away for want of more refined and intellectual sustenance.

Notwithstanding the great number of public and private schools and the attention that is supposed to be paid to all educational subjects, it is a matter of astonishment that we have so few good readers. Even among those whose business necessitates much reading aloud, clerks and lawyers for instance, good readers are very rare.

Did you ever know my mother? And, if so, how has she ever wronged you, that you should hate her so?
Her own nervousness had prevented her taking note of his, but now, as she raised her eyes to his face, she saw that it was very pale, and he was trembling violently.

He looked down to resume her seat. "You have done well, my child. I had no idea who your mother was, though she has haunted differently. I do not hate her, would not injure her—and once I loved her well."

A FREE GIFT.
Minnie blushed crimson. Harry spoke up bravely.
"Miss Minnie and I are engaged, sir."
"Ah, indeed! The task I have set you should be a labor of love, then. Set about it at once. Do you love him truly, Minnie?" he questioned, when Harry had left the room.

"The house is sold," cried Minnie Morrison, excitedly, bursting in, like a thunderbolt of war, upon her pale, fair mother's anxious visage.
"Is it sold?" she asked, when Harry had left the room.

"Yes, he did know, the old hard-hearted Harry Miller," she blushed charmingly as she spoke the name—"Harry Miller is his clerk and made so bold as to tell him all about it. And he said Mrs. Morrison could continue her tenant if she chose, though he should raise the rent. Ugh! how I hate him!"

"This was how hard it is to pay the rent even now; any increase of our expenses must needs encroach on our little capital, or break down my health by additional toil. Oh, if he knew how utterly I am punished, would he not spare?"

"Punished for what? Why should he know? Why should he spare? There's some mystery here—something that mamma keeps even from me. She said that in her distress and then went away for fear I should notice it and question her. But I won't; I'll find it out without that, and see if I can't help her. Let me see. Who can I question? Mr. Grimford himself. He must know what the mystery is; I'll ask him."

She had never yet seen this gentleman, who had indeed but lately come to the place, but so confirmed was her prejudice against him, and her conviction of his outward as well as internal hideousness, that when her lover assured her that his employer was rather handsome than otherwise, she considered the statement a mere satirical remark.

"Of course he's as ugly as hateful," she assured herself.
So, when she came into his presence at last, she was rather taken by surprise. Iron-gray hair and a stern expression made him, perhaps, somewhat formidable, but in the still handsome features and commanding figure there was nothing that fulfilled the promise of his name.

She was a little embarrassed, when he civilly inquired her business, as to how she should begin, but determined very quickly to explain to him the plain facts of the case, which she accordingly did, ending with the question: "Did you ever know my mother? And, if so, how has she ever wronged you, that you should hate her so?"

"The Doc and I saw at a glance what the trouble was. One man had shot another in the saloon. The wounded man lay on the ground and two or three men were holding his assailant. I perceived at once that here was a case for both of us. So I whispered to the Doc to pitch in and save the man if he could, and I would see to the legal defence of the guilty party. Oh, you see, I'm older in life, and I think all these various aspects of a case come to an elderly person quicker than they do to a younger fellow. He pitched in and so did I, and before midnight we were both sold, with all the other doctors and lawyers in town hanging around with nothing to do.

"Along about 2 o'clock in the morning we both got to our room and reported progress. He had dressed the man's wounds and was to call again in the morning, and I had seen the prisoner, had a long interview with him and his friends, planned out a very brilliant line of defense, and spent three bits treating the deputy sheriff. The Doc reported that the wounded man seemed to have money, and I reported that the prisoner and his crowd had agreed that if I got him clear I was to have $250. We went to bed confident that we had made a good beginning. The next morning the Doc was up some time before me, because he was a little anxious about his patient, and, as he was leaving the room, he said: "I'll be back after a little. Wait half an hour or so, and I will go to breakfast with you."

"I got up after a while, and, as he had not returned, I sat down and began mapping out on paper the case of my client. I had just got well into the business when I looked up, and there stood the Doc.
"The man's gone!" he gasped, looking vacantly around.
"Gone where?" says I.
"Down here, hanging to an awning."
"Jehusalem!" says I, and I grabbed my hat and walked down the street. Sure enough, there was my man hanging dead to an awning. I felt of his pulse and of his pockets, but didn't get anything. Everybody had disappeared from the town for the time being, and I went back to our rooms. We talked the matter over long and earnestly, and after we had looked at the thing in all its bearings we came to the conclusion that young men had no chance in that town, and left."

H. L. Frazier, a leading farmer of Weston precinct, left a few days ago on a visit to his old home in Rayville, Ray county, Missouri. He will remain away several months.

The M. E. church at Milton, through efforts of the pastor, Rev. W. T. Koontz has been thoroughly overhauled and repainted. The church yard has been enclosed by a handsome fence.
The business men of Adams have no reason to grow green with envy, and they never will with moss. Business is going forward in every branch. No long faces, no grumbling and no lagging here.

Adams is a city of about three hundred souls, and gives a turn-out of over a hundred for every church service. This we think exceeds any show of morality in towns much larger and more "portentious."
The hay-crop on the Hudson Bay will aggregate something over 1,000 tons, put up as follows: Geo. Young, 350 tons; W. S. Goodman, 250; R. A. Rice, 100; P. Hoon, 150; M. Croombs, 100; Wm. Stargies, 80; and W. and J. Hoon, 70.

Dr. Craft returned Wednesday from his ranch near Echo, where he has been for a week attending to threshing. His grain ground on sod yielded fifteen bushels per acre. The country in that vicinity is new, but gives promise of yielding abundant crops when in cultivation.
S. M. Pennington sold his ranch of 100 acres, nine miles west of Echo, to Jesse Moore, the other day, receiving therefor $2,000. This is a splendid farm and was sold cheap. There was raised this year on this place, on a piece of eight acres, 42 1/2 tons of timothy.

The following prisoners are now confined in the County Jail: John Riley, larceny from the person; John Atkin, assault with intent to commit rape; Brady Huffman, horse and cattle stealing; P. G. Strickland, assault with intent to kill, assault with a dangerous weapon, and kidnapping; Dr. Hoeder, serving a three month's sentence for larceny; Charles Johnson, horse stealing.
John Gulliford, who was in town the other day, says that the bears in the mountains, where he has his sheep, are very troublesome this year, and can only account for it because of there being no huckleberries. A few days ago one of these animals made a charge upon his band of sheep in mid-day and within sight of the herder, and commenced knocking them right and left, killing one. The herder's dog leaped chase and tread brain, when the herder killed it with his revolver. Four bears, two of them grizzlies, have been killed near the camp within the past two weeks.
