District Attorney Keator is in a quandary as to whether the herd law shall be referred to the voters of Umatilla county at the special election in June or shall be obliged to go on the ballot at the general election in November, 1920. He will put the matter up to the state attorney general.

Cuthbert Courtney "Did His Bit"

Cuthbert Courtney, a son of C. W. Courtney, was badly wounded while serving with the Signal Corps in the Argonne fighting. Although crippled for life, he writes a cheerful and encouraging letter to his aunt, Mrs. H. N. Greer, at Weston. The letter was written on a typewriter, which the nurses placed before him in his bed in the Letterman General Hospital, San Francisco. Among other things, he says:

"I have been in the hospital for nearly seven months now and it is getting almost tiresome, to say the least. I am not able to walk but can get up in a wheel chair. I will be here for several months yet and will still have to have some more work done—requiring one or more operations. I have had six already. I am sure anxious to get it over with and get to doing something for myself. I will always be a cripple and will have that much more to overcome than the other fellow. But, gee! someone had the job to do and I did my part. So when I do get somewhere in this world I can say that I beat out my handicap. I am planning for professional training."

Cuthbert was a boy of twelve or thereabouts when he lived in Weston with his parents, now residing in southern Oregon. He had a good position and bright prospects when he entered the army.

Several Weston streets were graded this week with the county scraper, pulled by Steel Mule and Fordson tractors.
