

CLASS — COMFORT — PERMANENCY

No 122

ONE-QUARTER of all the building lots in America face north, either squarely or at an angle; yet not one house in a hundred is planned with special reference to such a lot. That is one reason why we have so many sunless or darkened living rooms.

There is no such drawback in this house. It was designed for a northward facing lot. People do not live in halls, coat closets or stairways, and a kitchen should be designed for coolness. Therefore, these parts of the house are placed on the north, the street side, and living and dining room open to the garden on the south.

The recessed doorway opens into a little hall. On the left is a coat closet, on the right, the passage to the kitchen, with the basement stairs on the way. In front is a living room, 13½ feet by 18, and seeming larger because of the porch at the rear. The stairs go up from the inner wall of this room, and just beside the stairway is the fireplace.

On the other side of the fireplace is an archway to the dining room, 12 feet square. Both living and dining rooms open on a fine porch overlooking the garden, and taking full advantage of its privacy and its sunlight. Think how vines and flowers will nestle up to such a porch.

The kitchen, reached from the dining room through a pantry, is 8 feet by 11, with a side entrance and a separate approach to the stairs.

The second floor contains three bedrooms and a bath room, a linen closet and a small trunk room. All the bedrooms have closets and cross ventilation, and two of them have open fireplaces. This last feature could be omitted if desired.

The walls of this house are built of face brick, the most varied, interesting and beautiful of all building materials, with either common brick or hollow tile for backing. The inside has gypsum plaster on metal lath, and asphalt shingles protect the roof.

Such a house costs not to exceed 10 per cent more than a wooden one. It is worth at least 40 per cent more the day it is finished, and the difference in value keeps increasing. Face brick has a standing, a "class," which wood cannot hope to rival; and the brick house is cheap to maintain, costs little for insurance, and depreciates very slowly. A frame house may be wiped out at any moment by fire. This brick house would have to be set on fire, and then only a very small part of it would burn.

If your lumber or material dealer or contractor doubts this or wants any further information on the matter, have him write to the Permanent Building Bureau, in the Chamber of Commerce, Chicago.

SCENE FROM VITAGRAPH'S
"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE"
BY JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
A VITAGRAPH SPECIAL PRODUCTION

Tuesday, Dec. 21

A 50c super special, including comedy, for regular prices 35c-15c.

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone," Vitagraph's splendid screen version of the powerful novel by James Oliver Curwood, which will be seen at the Memorial Hall on Tuesday, December 21, is a veritable "Call of the North." And a clarion call it is that this splendid, vigorous story of the frozen Northland sends out from the screen after being picture-ized and made into a superb, big special photo-drama production.

The magic of the motion picture turns warm and glowing pages of masterly story into a pulsing, living drama whose charm and realism carries one away to that vast white country "up there," north of the Fifty-third, with all its grim glory and grandeur.

It breathes the breath of life into the staunch and sturdy men and the courageous and beautiful women of this story. And in the deep rich colors and splendid hues that the painted world could never find it has painted a background for the romance and tragedy—the villainy and valor, the stirring mystery and the startling surprise.

That is the Call of the North—and everybody answers it.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT, DEC. 25
"RIO GRANDE"

A six-reel super special filmed amidst a wealth of scenic beauty. "Rio Grande" is a vivid, colorful, virile story. It depicts a flaming romance between a Texas Ranger, who is an Irish American, and a beautiful Senorita who, though half American, hates the "Gringo" and loves her Mexico. It depicts the adventurous life along the Rio Grande—the river of blood and of romance that separates Mexico from Texas.

The appeal in "Rio Grande" is wide spreading and tremendous. Men women and children will talk about it long after other pictures have come and gone.

JAPANESE SPURRED
BY U. S. ARMAMENT

Geneva.—World disarmament must be a slow and gradual process, the league of nations assembly commission which has been deliberating on the question more than three weeks decided. Opinions of leading members are that neither the political situation nor public opinion is yet ready for full realization of the object. Even beginning reduction of armament is not considered possible.

The program to be presented to the assembly is to proceed in three stages. The first involves an agreement between the powers to make no further increase in armament. The second will provide a gradual reduction on a basis to be laid down by the armament commission. The third will provide for general and complete disarmament when found that the situation permits.

Viscount Ishii has given notice that Japan cannot reduce her armament while the United States increases hers. One conspicuous fact is the necessity of propaganda to prepare the world for a radical solution of the question.

Gathering together their belongings in a belief that the naval arsenal at Fort Lafayette, a small island near Fort Hamilton, was ablaze, terrified scores fled their homes for safer zones, driven to frenzied haste by the series of detonations heard for miles around.

An official statement from Fort Hamilton said no lives were lost and only four persons were slightly injured.

DISASTER RELIEF PROVES BEST NATIONAL INSURANCE

When the man on the street is asked for his annual Red Cross dues of $1 during Roll Call week, November 11 to 25, he will know that half of that dollar stays in his own community. If he has done an average amount of Red Cross reading he will know that a small slice out of the other 50 cents is appropriated to "disaster relief."

But unless he is one of the exceptionally few he will not know what "disaster relief" has meant to the world during the life of the American Red Cross, nor will he realize what small slices of dollars will do if there are enough of them.

In the Northwestern Division, time after time the relief organization has met its crisis and has stood the test. Twice in Oregon in December of 1919 —at Mosier when fire left families destitute and again when the Marshfield chapter cared for survivors and recovered bodies of the dead from the wrecked schooner "Chanlor"—the test was met. In 1920 came the landslide at Juneau, Alaska, and the hotel fire at Klamath Falls, Oregon. More people learned that "disaster relief" means things in the lives of men.

In the 38 years since its incorporation up to June of 1919, the American Red Cross had participated in 189 disaster relief expeditions. It directed the expenditure of approximately $12,500,000. Before the organization had attained its present large membership funds often were raised through popular subscription for such large disasters as the Mississippi floods and cyclones of 1882 and 1883, the Texas famine, the Armenian massacres of 1893 and 1894, the Martinique volcano eruption and many others.

A list of all the Red Cross relief work in times of fire, flood and famine would take pages. Long before the organization under the stress of war and war's results had grown into the lives of millions, disaster relief was one of its foremost activities. The Congressional Charter under which the Red Cross has operated since 1905 sets forth as one of the chief purposes of the organization: "to continue and carry on a system of relief and to apply the same in mitigating the sufferings caused by pestilence, famine, fires, floods and other great national calamities."

And now, with its wonderful organization of chapters, branches and auxiliaries reaching to the farthest parts of the nation, its members instructed and ready for action when the occasion arises, Red Cross "disaster relief" has become accident insurance for the world.

Taking After Mother.

Part just came home from college and had a "shadow" on his upper lip. He stopped to say "Hello" to his grandfather.

His grandfather looked him over and said: "Why, son, you look more like your mother every day."

"What makes you think so?" asked Bert.

"Why, because your father had a mustache that came down to his chin. Just look at that one of yours; you must take after your mother."—Indianapolis News.

Not Like a Lawyer.

Mirandy, of dusky hue, made a poor witness. In answer to every question put to her by the attorney she invariably replied, "I think so." The attorney finally became disgusted.

"Now look here," he warned. "I want you to cut out that thinking and answer questions. Now talk!"

"Yes, sah," quavered Mirandy. "But, mistab, you see it's like dis. Ah can't like you lawyers; ah can't talk without thinkin'."
