THY ENDEAVOR.

It is ever ceasless striving That makes life a noble thing-Striving for the good of others. That doth blessings on us bring. If we teel for those that suffer, And can sympathize with pain. Stronger grows our better Nature.

To endure and toil again.

As the mist from off the ocean Comes to earth again in rain, Shall Nature's laws but show us That her seeming loss is gain.

So that it years are spent in toiling, Making paths for other feet, Weary not, for soon or later.

Thou thy rich reward shall meet. Then while earth is full of sorrow, And we know the stroke of woe,

Be thine earnest, calm endeavor, Kindness, hope and love to show; Help to raise the struggling spirit, Bound by want and misery fast,

Fill thy life with holy action.

God will crown you at the last. Miscellaneous Items.

Flirtation

BY ALCYONE.

I lounged an hour along our streets last Sunday, and amid all the charming associations and the that passed and repassed me, it was an hour of sadness. I feel I should be culpable and negligent, did I not dare to tell the girls and young men assembled there that the very flowers must have blushed for the actions of some. I know I will be charged with a desire to deprive them of a "little fun," but-mothers, look to your daughters; fathers, look to your sons.

The ambition is misdirected that can fill hours of recreation only with incentive and desires, that degrade our spiritual being into the mere gratification of passion. Allowing for the spirit and exuberance of youth, there is a demon of familiarity and abandon possessing the young that ought to be negatived at once, and this fact the parent cannot too easily impress upon the mind of the child. If an example is needed, go to any promiscious gathering, and see wontonness in its incipiency, which no false delicacy can conceal or
