Attorneys at Law,

I know a garden of fragrance, A garden of golden bloom. There is sunshine wreathed in the roses, And stars aglow in the gloom. know the pathways turn by turn, For back in the long ago used to chase the butterflies there, And watch for the roses to blow.

How balmy sweet, in the olden time, The breach of those dainty flowers; The moments fell with a silvery chime To sleep in the golden hours; And the lilies used to love me then As they leaned across my feet, To hold me back in the pathway fair. For they knew the days were fleet.

As the lilies paled and died away, And the roses side by side Have faded year by year, to-day I am left in the eventide : If I know the garden so well, so well, I never may enter there. But morn by morn at the gateway still, I can see the children fair.

Step down through the gilded blossoms With their faces all aglow, And I look back through the broken days, To that time when mine was so; And I wonder oft and oft again, If the lilies bend as fair Fo the little children in their flight As they did when I was there. wonder now if the vellow gold
