ROSALIE.

BY THE LATE B. F. WASHINGTON. Now twilight sits upon the hill And lengthened shadows the valley fill: The wild bird's song is hushed, and still Is dreaming nature, Rosalie; While here within this spot, o'ergrown With leaves and flowers. I sit alone, To muse on thee and hours flown, Love-winged and joyous, Rosalie.

To muse upon those happy times. When first I won thee with my rhymes ; When sweet as music's vesper chimes, Our hearts accorded, Rosalie; When life flow'd ever like the stream Of some brain pictured levely dream, Where airy shapes and fancies gleam Upon its bright waves, Rosalie.

Afar in memory's misty light-As stars steal through the gloom of night-The twinklings of a vision bright Come gently o'er me. Rosalie; A vine-clad cot beneath the hill -The gladsome wanderings of a rill-A form which love's bright beamings fill-Are all before me, Rosalie.

Once more we walk this wildwood shade Where oft in "love's young dream" we stny'd, Again upon the flowery glade We pick bright blossoms, Rosalie; Once more I hear the wild bird's song That charmed us all the summer long, And with it comes a glorious throng Of bright-winged visions, Rosalie.

And as the stars come out to night, All trembling on their lonely hight, Methinks amid their dewy light Thine eyes smile on me Rosalie; Those soft, those gently speaking eyes, Where hopes and pleasant memories, Like silver waves, alternate rise Upon a bright sea, Rosalie.

Thy face to me was as a tide. Where barks, love-laden, ever glide, With Hope, their pilot and their guide, And I their haven, Rosalie; But ah! a cloud on swift wings passed, And all the sky was overcast, And then were wrecked, alas! too fast, My freighted treasures, Rosalie.

I cannot twine my fingers now In thy soft hair, nor kiss thy brow, Nor hear thy gentle accents flow In murmured music. Rosalie; I cannot feel thy breath so warm pon my cheek, nor press thy form, Which like a flow ret in a storm, Slept on my bosom, Rosalie.

And in each summer flower I see Thy own eyes, bright exceedingly, Look up and greet me, Rosalie; I start and sigh to think that then Art but to me a memory now-A star that gemmed life's morning brow Then fled and left me, Rosalie.

A tall oak stricken in its pride-The fierce red bolt has rent its side -Scattered its seared leaves far and wide Upon the cold hearth, Rosalie; So too, my heart is sorely riven By a stern fate, 'gainst which I've striven, Till my poor thoughts like leaves are driven Upon the rude world, Rosalie,

And I have sought to find, in vain, This vision of my youth again ; And I have dreamed until my brain Was wild with dreaming, Rosalie; But, oh! to sit and muse alone, Within this spot with flowers o'ergrown, Is all that's left me now, my own, My lost, my lovely Rosalie.

JOHNATHAN SMITH. DEAR SMITH: - I went to Breitman's this morning, and he showed me the bill sent in by Mr. Shad, your attorney. He says that by the injury to your buggy you were stopped from going to town, where you might have made $500,000 by a speculation in mess pork. He has put in a bill for $500,007 50. I would not object to the $7.50 for repairs to the buggy, but the rest of the claim is ridiculous. Yours, John Bull.
