THE THOUSAND ISLES. BY JOHN SANDS.

The Thousand Isles, the Thousand Isles, Where Hiram went a week to spend, Conadian summer round them smiles, But Hiram's summer has no end. No cares of state perplex his mind. Such trifling things he leaves behind.

St. Lawrence' corrent seeks the sea. And meets that stream from Caba's

Let not the river ask, 'Is free Thy island yet from Spanish crime?" The chainless current, mute with shame

Would chill to speak the Spaniard's name. The haughty Spaniard now can boast That we are weak who once were strong Can flaunt his flag along our coast, Impose on freemen chain or thong. And find, where once our eagle flew,

A ring dove's weak and puling coo!

When Ingraham seized the Austrian's throat And wrested Koszta from his held -When Ingenham fought and Webster wrote, They neither fought nor wrote for gold: They asked no price; their country $\frac{1}{2}$ name Was richer then than gold or fame.

And what art thou, my country, now. So brave, so strong in days of old? And fewer gems thy sceptre held; Nor Spanish gold nor British bate. Had bribed or forced thy sons to wair!

Must we but blush for days like these? Must we but weep for days now done? Still must the empire of the seas Be where it was ere Washington? No coward chief ain ruled us then!

Oh, once more, mothers, bear us men! The Thousand Isles, the Thousand Isles, Where Grant has been his week to spend In amber let them fix their smiles, Nor smile afresh for foe or friend. Our beroes once were not so scant-Forgot, O Isles, ye smiled-for Grant !

ville, and had a most hearty recepdress which was presented him the President spoke encouragingly of the foreign relations of France, and also of the satisfactory condition of things at home. As he had ruled in the past, he told the good people of Havre, it was his intention to rule in the future. In the afternoon he paid a complimentary visit to the American man-ofwar Shenandoah, now lyingsin the harbor at Havre. As he stepped on deck the band struck up the "Marseillaise" and the yards were manned. As he stood under the Stars and Stripes President Thiers, with his historic mind, must have reflected on the different fate of republican institutions in France and in the United States. We owe Frenchmen much for the asof Independence. We have never been wholly forgetful of that kindness; nor had they occasion to complain of our want of gratitude when, imitating our example, they attempted, in 1789 and subsequent years, to found a republic. Our and civil, has remained intact; and under the lead of manifest destiny it marches on in pride and power to a glorious future. How different has it been with France! How checkered in comparison has been her career! Two restorations, two empires, one kingdom, three republies, with revolutions almost innu-Republic that now is-who shall say that it is not trembling in the balance?
