A * CRENADE.

From the falls of your snow-white pil-Star and planet are leaping Out through the cloudless blue; Planet and stars are weeping,

And wandering where are you. The moon, like a royal maiden, Sits on her cloud-built throne, And the breath of the dainty tulips From the garden path is flown; Under the drooped nareissus The bulbul sits and sings, And the leaves of the rose are blushing. The dew from the wind's light wir gs.

Sweet, I am waiting still, watching the lami-lit lattice Till day hand on the window-sill les the dainty rose leaves test levingly cluster there, sterling till somebody culls them

To twine in your dark brown hair. My own, my beautiful Anna, Come, till my love I pour-Come, till I tell the passion My heart can hide no more Till I sie in the rich, sweet Juster Of the dark the eyes divine, And these in a blissful rapture

Shine out, O shimmering planet! O panting shadow I lie still; Methinks 'tis the rim of her raiment I see by the window-sill; Hush, bullful nucler the roses! Oh, rapture! the hour draws near!

Salence: thou restless zephyr Tis her step, itis her voice I hear! to you think we've all gone mad, sir? In truth, I wish you'd leave off; I'm dying to-night with a toothache,

"Tis really strange, 'tis moustrous, How little of sense remains.
