off the Track-A Smash Up.

The down express train last Tuesday morning come very near meeting with serious accident just above Canemah. As the train was coming down the road on arun of about twenty miles an hour, s cow got on the track before the engineer saw her, and falling across the gineer saw her, and failing actors the ralls, threw the locomotive off the track. The engineer, as soon as he ob-track. The engineer, as soon as he observed the cow, whistled down brakes the night, on the 10th of last month, but no sooner was that done, and be- the girl came to town and got a license, but no sooner was that done, and be fore his hand could have got off of the whistle cord, the engine jumped the whistle cord, the engine jumped the back and fell over on the side of the back and a freight and express ars and a freight and express ars ere off the track, and had run about whom he issues a license,) and then the length of four rails on the ties, cutting them up considerably as they jumped along over them. The passenger car had not got off the rails, and hence the passengers were not awa e that any accident had happened until all danger was over, and the engine began to blow off steam, when some one came into the car and called out to the passengers to get out the back way. For a few moments considerable excitegers, but they all got out without any accident. At the place the accident occurred, the road runs along within six or eight feet of the bank of the riv-er, and had the engine gone over tween. six or eight feet of the bank of the river-er, and had the engine gone over twen-er, and had the engine gone over twen-Marshfield for Portland, where they ty feet further back, she would have undoubtedly rolled into the river, and dragged all the train in after her. The water at this place is very deep, and there would have been a watery grave for at least forty passengers who were on the train. It was a most fortunate Fon the train. escape, and the passengers, after they got out and saw the narrow escape they had made, felt truly grateful that matters were not worse. The engineer stuck to his engine until she went over, and then saved himself by jumping off. If he had not, he would have been kill-ed, as the engine house fell across a large stump that stands by the road and which passed completely through it, smashing it into fragments. The fireman walked out the room to the front just as she was going over, and thus saved himself. The cow, of course, was choosed up in pieces, and scatterd all over the track from where she was first struck to where the engine fell over. While the cow gave up her hide, she did considerable damage before doing so. The engineer says that the cow jumped from behind a rock, and he did not see her until she was on the center of the track just before the locomotive. It could not have been on accont of any curve in the road, as the road, where the cow was first struck, is as straight as an arrow for about two hundred yards, but where for that kind of a road, and taking into friends both here and Salem, and in for that kind of a road, and taking into consideration that several other cows have attempted to buck the train off at this point we would think it better pol-ley for the company to have the trains. Have not undermined the sources the consideration in the company to have the trains. It is notice home. We learn that he ley for the company to have the trains. Have not undermined the sources the consideration of the Liv-the colleges in his native hand run & little slower in such places. Hav- the colleges in his native land. ing been one of the passengers on the train, we feel that we were fortunate in being able to write the account of the smash-up, and have no desire to try the experiment again on that part of the road. No sooner had the accident ocurred than the scene was visited by many of the people of this place and the entire population of Canemah, who felt thankful that it was no worse. The cars were sent for by a special locomo-tive, and a force of hands came up to get the engine on the track, which was not done until the next day, and a side track was made to allow the other trains to pass by . It was a close call, and we are not inclined to censure any one, but trust that better caution will be taken in the uture to avoid accidents in such localities. A short distance, not more than ten feet back, the engine could not have found a lodg-mar, and hence would have had to go into the river, add in all probabilities the entire train would have gone with it. Too much caution cannot be taken. A MYSTERY. - A key was recently picked up on the steps leading to the cellar of Major Charman's store, which had evidently been filed with the intention of opening the padlock which fastens the iron doors on the sidewalk. It is supposed that the would-be burglar had been working on his project and dropped the key down between the iron bars, and probably had not time to get another. The key had been filed so as to very nearly fit the lock. The object of the scoundrel was evidently to get into the store, or get what he wanted out of the cellar. The Major proposes to fix the lock so that the next attempt made will not come as near being successful.

An Elopement. A rather curious elopement took place from just below this town last Wednesday night. As we get the story

one of the best and most successful of Mrs. Newby's works. It will remind it is about as follows: A few months ago a farmer living below town a short the reader of the clever novels of soci-ety by Miss Jane Austin and Miss Ferdistance, employed a man to work on his place. The farmer had a very nice rier, both so highly praised by Sir Walter Scott; and of the more recent productions of Mrs. Grey and Miss Ellen Pickering. In this new story, an English baronet, with his four children his place. The farmer had a very nice his place. The farmer had a very nice daughter, whom the parents fairly worshiped, and for whom they had done all in their power to give her a thorough education and make her fit occupy the foreground. The evil spirit for the wife of any gentleman. The person which the farmer employed is a Lady Lora Vivian, a young and beautiful widow, who, while deeply was not regarded as of any account. attached to one man, promises to marry his elder brother, for the sake of his title and wealth. This leads to misunderstanding and misfortune-one broderstanding and instortune—one bro-ther proceeds to Australia, where he founds a settlement, and builds a sea-port, the other devoting himself to public life, with a fair prospect, at the close of the narrative, of having his heart aches relieved by matrimony. There is a good deal of counting in this There is a good deal of courting in this they went to a private house, where tale-the wooing of Louisa Elton, the proper heroine, is decidedly original. There are four marriages, and a fifth they called a minister, and enjoined like secrecy on him, where the marriage ceremony was performed. They then returned to the house of the paon the cards! The characters are well drawn, and ably individualized. Mrs. rents, and remained there until a week lewby writes of English rural life, and ago last Wednesday. On that night, fashionable London society, as if she while the father was absent, they left were thoroughly familiar with both. In a word, "Sunshine and Shadow," though not what might be called senthe house and went to Portland. The next morning the mother of the girl was unable to conjecture why her daughter was not up for breakfast, and though not what might be called sen-sational, is eminently readable and very entertaining. Mrs. Newby's for-mer novels, entitled "Married," "Mar-garet Hamilton," "Kate Kennedy," "Trodden Down," "Only Temper," "Right and Left." "Wondrous Strange" and "Common Sense," have obtained a wide-spread popularity in Europe; new reside.
