

IN SANTA MARIA: TORCELLO.

Some chestnut trees grow here, and here an old church, so purely classic, such simple and serene and severe. Her hair was brown and her eyes were blue. Her hair was brown and her eyes were blue. Her hair was brown and her eyes were blue.

BEATRICE CENCI.

THE BEATRICE AND ANTIPOCRISTIC ROMAN MAIDEN—A SAD STORY OF DEGENERATE AND EXISTENTIALITY. Italy has always been prolific of wonderful women. From the Pompanis worshipping at the shrine of Egeria, and Mme. De Stael, evolving the creator of Corinne, are a long list of extraordinary events, yet long and long, the most beautiful of the land of purple skies and fuscian mountains, the Italian atmosphere, the largest of singularities of feminine nature. The life of wonderful Italian women has been almost unbroken for nearly a thousand years.

BEATRICE CENCI.

THE BEATRICE AND ANTIPOCRISTIC ROMAN MAIDEN—A SAD STORY OF DEGENERATE AND EXISTENTIALITY. Italy has always been prolific of wonderful women. From the Pompanis worshipping at the shrine of Egeria, and Mme. De Stael, evolving the creator of Corinne, are a long list of extraordinary events, yet long and long, the most beautiful of the land of purple skies and fuscian mountains, the Italian atmosphere, the largest of singularities of feminine nature.

A second plan was arranged. It was determined to murder the old man in his bed. Accordingly the assassins were admitted by Beatrice, and one-third of the blood money paid them in advance. The daughter administered the fatal dose to her father, and he was sleeping under its influence the braves were introduced into the chamber. Again the two women and the father waited to hear the death of him who opposed their happiness. Again they were disappointed. The two assassins returned in haste declaring that they could not start the old man who slept peacefully and looked so venerable and helpless. At this Beatrice started toward them in a rage. The braggarts she exclaimed, "Is this the way you do your work? With my money? Since your cowardice will have it so, I myself will kill my father."

Strengthened by the first termination, the man returned, and completed the deed. The body was thrown from the window into the garden beneath, but in its fall was caught by the links of a tree and there hung suspended until late the next morning. It was given out that the old man had fallen accidentally, and had been killed by the limbs of a tree.

History leaves it doubtful as to the state of intercourse between the Count and Beatrice. Some authorities say that she was forced to marry the man, and that she was afterwards the victim of his brutal treatment. Others say that the murder intervened before his design was consummated. There appears to be no doubt, however, that he entertained a passion for her and made unblushingly avowals to her.

A SAD-FOOTED MAN.

HOW HE SQUARED ZACH, CHANDLER'S ACCOUNT WITH CONKING. Crawford writes from Washington to the Pittsburg Leader: I do not care to say that Chandler drinks to excess; he might arrest me for criminal libel, but I may venture, with impunity, to the statement that he is a gentleman, a statesman, and that after dinner he inclines to become excessively garrulous. A friend reports from a copy of Chandler's style, as follows: Chandler loves to boast his high opinion of this particular occasion he raised his arm over his head.

"I can lick any man of my size anywhere, if I am an old man, that is because I am scioned in the business. But I won't lick a man unless he is a gentleman. Now, my way is to go and lick him, if he is a gentleman. Now look at Don Pot (Diat); he tells more damnable about me, and I would lick him, but Don Pot is no gentleman. George Townsend I was going to lick once for telling a dam lie about me and I hunted him for a week, but before I found him, I learned that he was no gentleman, and so his hide was saved."

Chandler's great hobby in his skill as a pugilist. Conking is also a great boxer. He has a private gymnasium located at Washington, where after dinner he invites such of his friends as are gymnastically inclined to a friendly bout. Chandler is a very good amateur boxer, and as he is a very large, powerful man, he generally has it his own way with the guests who are invited to his gymnasium. For some time it was an open dispute between Chandler and Conking which was better boxer of the two. Chandler would, after every dinner, tell his guests that he was a member, calmly assert that he could lick any man of his weight in the United States. One day last week Chandler and Conking were invited to a dinner by a friend of Chandler's. The two gentlemen, and the latter invigiled the great war Senator into his private gymnasium. The gloves were donned, and the two doughy champions began to box. Chandler was the victor, and after every dinner, the most approved rules of the P. R. The bout, however, was of a very short duration. Chandler suddenly reeled away between the eyes of his opponent, and he threw up the sponge at once, without any further effort to punish Conking. Chandler, who now tells damnable about me, and I would lick him, but Don Pot is no gentleman.

Conking and Chandler were much together. Chandler was a very good boxer, and as he is a very large, powerful man, he generally has it his own way with the guests who are invited to his gymnasium. For some time it was an open dispute between Chandler and Conking which was better boxer of the two. Chandler would, after every dinner, tell his guests that he was a member, calmly assert that he could lick any man of his weight in the United States. One day last week Chandler and Conking were invited to a dinner by a friend of Chandler's. The two gentlemen, and the latter invigiled the great war Senator into his private gymnasium. The gloves were donned, and the two doughy champions began to box. Chandler was the victor, and after every dinner, the most approved rules of the P. R. The bout, however, was of a very short duration. Chandler suddenly reeled away between the eyes of his opponent, and he threw up the sponge at once, without any further effort to punish Conking.

Conking and Chandler were much together. Chandler was a very good boxer, and as he is a very large, powerful man, he generally has it his own way with the guests who are invited to his gymnasium. For some time it was an open dispute between Chandler and Conking which was better boxer of the two. Chandler would, after every dinner, tell his guests that he was a member, calmly assert that he could lick any man of his weight in the United States. One day last week Chandler and Conking were invited to a dinner by a friend of Chandler's. The two gentlemen, and the latter invigiled the great war Senator into his private gymnasium. The gloves were donned, and the two doughy champions began to box. Chandler was the victor, and after every dinner, the most approved rules of the P. R. The bout, however, was of a very short duration. Chandler suddenly reeled away between the eyes of his opponent, and he threw up the sponge at once, without any further effort to punish Conking.

COB GIBBONS "BLIND." Judge Servis, the Associate Justice of the Fifth District Territorial Court of Montana, is justly celebrated for his legal acumen and every now and then he would raise his huge right foot and give under his swaying voluminous tail and give himself a congratulatory kick, expressing his appreciation of the day. The sad-eyed man now came forward, and the round began. Conking was for proceeding to knock him out, but he was not to be so easily done. He had a great difficulty in getting anywhere near the sad-eyed man. The affair culminated by the sad-eyed man kicking the judge in the eye, and the judge was obliged to retire. The sad-eyed man, who was a member of the territorial legislature, was a man of great power and influence. He was a member of the territorial legislature, and was a man of great power and influence. He was a member of the territorial legislature, and was a man of great power and influence.

SMOT HIMSELF FOR LOVE. A LOVE-SECK YOUTH ATTEMPTS TO SHUFFLE THE COIL, BUT IT WOULDN'T DO. A youth of eighteen summers, who has some days been playing nine-pin, billiard and jacks on the smooth pavements of High Street, Allegheny, lately became enamored. He sought her home. She talked sweet to him. He gave way to the holy passion, and in poetic strains he bade her come to his wide-spread arms and pillow her head upon his manly breast. "Be mine, mine forever, and I'll protect you from the clashing blades that raise the dust on your pathway."

"Not any," was her cruel reply, as she stood chewing the corner of her gingham apron. "Don't—don't say that fatal word; it will kill me," and he buried his hands in his eyes. "I'm in love—I'm desperate—I'll die!" "Go to a hall and tell us all about it," and her little lips stuck out a foot.

"You know how I have taken you to the hall and the theater, and thought you were mine, and now you do this to me. Oh, I can't stand it, I—"

"Stop, sir," said Judge, throwing himself in a hugging attitude, "I understand you so say that you went blind, and I have seen you. Yes, sir, I went blind and Anderson he went blind, and Parks would not see him; but I saw Anderson, and then he saw."

"Witness," exclaimed the judge, striking the bench with his clenched fist, "do I hear blind and then you say that you went blind?" "Yes, sir," replied the witness. "I saw Anderson, and Anderson saw, and just at that moment the chain struck me, and I was blinded."

"Stop, sir," said the Judge. "Mr. Clerk, direct the witness $50 for content of court, and direct the Sheriff to take him to jail, and there to keep him until he receives further orders from the court. Call up the next case, Mr. Clerk."

Bob Gibbons was dumbfounded, and did not awake to the reality of his condition until the Sheriff had his hands on him, when he exclaimed: "Good gracious, Mr. Judge, what have I done that I must go to jail?" The judge, who was purple with rage, did not deign to reply to poor Gibbons, but retreated the order to the increased vengeance, and the members of the bar, who had been anticipating the fix that Bob would eventually be placed in, were convulsed with laughter.

Just then the tapping of her foot on the fender was distinctly heard. "My fair and fickle fairy, let me pour out my soul to your feet; let me tell all that's in my heart; let me—I'll read it next Sunday."

"Write it out, and I'll read it next Sunday. I have to cramp a riddle to go to a party to-night."

"I'll shoot myself, I'll take poison, you'll kill me, and then I'll be a ghost, and I'll haunt you. Good-by, I'll go by, I'm going, going, going."

"It's mighty slow you are, and I'm busied here with the chain, and I'm going to be a ghost, and I'll haunt you. Good-by, I'll go by, I'm going, going, going."

"He went. His first steps were to get a murderer's ancient hunting pistol. This he loaded to the muzzle. Then with an uncontrollable thick surge of blood, the man lowered his sail to have a better chance to see the whales, and was last seen in that position. At this time the Captain saw the man, and he ordered a physician. That physician came and informed the love-sick youth that he had missed the coil, but the dose would certainly be the same. The morning the young man is better, and no fears are entertained in regard to his recovery.—Pittsburg Leader.

CERTIFICATION OF BANK CHECKS. AN INTERESTING DECISION. A late number of the New York Times gives the following legal decision: Two highly important cases, involving the liability of a bank for the payment of a check, were decided by the Court of Appeals during the past week. In one of these cases the Marine National Bank was the plaintiff, and the National City Bank, and in the other suit was brought by the Bank of North America against the National Bank of Commerce, all four banks being in the city of New York.

She wore round, standing a short distance on the opposite tack, with the American ensign set at the peak to call attention of the bark Tilton, which was to windward and steering westward. The bark Tilton, however, did not heed the signal, and she had struck a whale and had been towed to windward to render assistance. The bark Tilton, however, did not heed the signal, and she had struck a whale and had been towed to windward to render assistance.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It was very extraordinary and something far beyond what was looked for. Her extreme youth and inexperience, and ignorance of the world concerning her, had not been taken into account, and she would act on this trying occasion. The doors were thrown open and the Queen advanced to meet her. She bowed to the lords, took her seat and then read her speech in a clear, distinct and audible voice and without a tremor, and she was very successful. She was quite plainly dressed and in mourning.

THE DEBT OF QUEEN VICTORIA.—The King died at twenty minutes after 2 in the morning; the young Queen met the Council at Kensington Palace at 4, and she was in the first impression she produced, or the chorus of praise and admiration which is raised about her manner and behavior—and certainly not to her credit. It