It would naturally have been expected that the first result of the passage of the appropriation bill in the District of Columbia would be a reduction in the number of public works that are now in progress, and in the near future would be completed, but the opposite has been the case. A large number of projects have already been added to those which have been approved, and, in fact, the bill has been a stimulus to the expenditure of funds.

The bill was of the nature of a general appropriation bill, and was not intended to be a permanent measure. It was passed in order to meet an immediate necessity, and was to be limited in its operation to the current fiscal year. The provisions of the bill were not to be construed as a grant of authority to spend money in any future year.

The passage of the bill has resulted in a叫声 of preparations for the future. The President has said that the expenditure of funds for public works is of the utmost importance to the national welfare, and that it is necessary to continue the program of development. He has also stated that the country is in a difficult financial position, and that it is necessary to increase the revenue in order to meet the demands of the government.

The passage of the bill has also resulted in a叫声 of excitement among the people. The President has been accused of being a spendthrift, and of not understanding the gravity of the situation. There has been a叫声 of protest against the bill, and a叫声 of support for those who believe in the necessity of spending money for public works.

The bill has also been criticized for its provisions regarding the expenditure of funds. Some have called for a more careful examination of the projects that are to be undertaken, and for a stricter control over the disposition of the money. Others have argued that the bill is necessary to meet the needs of the country, and that it is important to proceed with the work.

The passage of the bill has resulted in a叫声 of debate among the members of Congress. Some have argued in favor of the bill, while others have opposed it. The debate has been characterized by a叫声 of passion, and has been a source of division among the members of the legislative body.

The passage of the bill has also resulted in a叫声 of controversy among the people. Some have supported the bill, while others have opposed it. The controversy has been characterized by a叫声 of hate, and has been a source of discord among the citizens of the country.
