How the Boys Served Mr. Brassier.

From the Detroit Free Press.

Mr. Brassier, who lives on Ninth avenue, has a son about twelve years old named Claudius, and the other evening this boy received permission to allow a neighbor's boy to stay all night with him. The old people sleep down stairs in the sitting-room, and the boys were put into a room directly above. When they went up to bed Claudius had the clothes-line under his coat, and the neighbor's boy had a mask in his pocket. They didn't kneel down and say their prayers like good boys and then jump into bed and tell bear stories, but as soon as the door was locked the Brassier boy remarked:

"A splendid constitution in ruins!"

He said these things to me the other day, when I went up to get "bumped," and I've been so down-hearted ever since that one of the cornerers has kept his eye on my every movement.

"A splendid constitution in ruins!"

He said these things to me the other day, when I went up to get "bumped," and I've been so down-hearted ever since that one of the cornerers has kept his eye on my every movement.

"You have got a splendid constitution," continued the Professor, speaking in the tone of a fortune-teller, "but hard work and trouble have broken you down, and you need a long rest."

That was nice talk to a man who has been sick but two days in seven years, and who has gained seven pounds of good, solid flesh since October, but he said so. And after pawing once or twice over my head he went on:

"You have no hope—all ahead is dark and gloomy to you."

If he had said I was half Indian and half Hottentot he couldn't have been more right, but I let him go on:

"You have no self-trust, no check."
