The Portuguese made a show of resistance, but the whole affair was accomplished without bloodshed, to the general satisfaction of all parties.

To sum up the subsequent history of the Brazilian throne, it is sufficient to say that the first Emperor, on account of his unwillingness to grant the people a liberal constitution, was obliged to abdicate in 1831. Like his father, he took refuge in the home of his ancestors. At that time the present Emperor was a child. The empire was accordingly governed by a regency until the year 1840, when Dom Pedro II., although only fifteen years of age, assumed the supreme power. Upon the abdication of Dom Pedro I. the constitution was aftered to a more republican form. The power of the Emperor was limited, for although he holds a higher title, and receives a salary fifteen times larger than that of the President of the United States, yet his prerogative is less in many respects. The veto power amounts to very little. If an enactment passes both houses, he has a right to withhold his sanction at first. It is then sent back to them, and if they pass it again, even by no greater majority than before, it becomes a law. - Capt. Codman, in the Galaxy for June.

Popping the Question.

The subject is one of great interest and delicacy, but I suspect that no rules can be laid down for putting the momentous question which do not admit of an infinite number of exceptions. I am no believer in the old shapherd's saw, "He never loved who loved not at first sight;" neither do I agree with Mrs. Malaprop that it is best to begin with a little aversion. A small substratum of esteem, however, is necessary to build up a very pretty matrimonial structure, and the only trouble consists in laying the first stone. We have done with the fashion countenanced by Mr. Charles Grandison, of going down upon one knee and giving expression to a flood of amaterial eloquence compounded of admiration and profuse promises. A more leads to the late repentance, which is said to follow marriage in haste. the unfortunate Benedick has only to blame the absorption of his time in "Business." It is questionable whether, if he had deferred his action to a period of leisure, he would have been more successful. The receipts show a decrease from the estimates from customs of over $10,000,000; from internal revenue of over $4,000,000. and increase in miscellaneous of over $3,000,000. The expenses are considerably over $5,000,000 less than than the estimates.
