A Texas Marriage.

A letter to the New York Sun from Home Creek, Coleman County, Texas June 12, says: Fifty miles from selves on one of the most delightful stretches of prairie land in Western party on their return, we concluded to accompany Capt. Hardy Parker, of the Lafitte ranche, and three of his friends, to what he termed one want to see you all have a good of the liveliest weddings that ever time. "jostled the State o' Texas."

"Who's to be married?" was asked. "Old Jaquette's daughter. We call him 'Dou' for short. We call her 'Reenie;' and the chap that's goin' to get here is old Uvalde's son 'Mig,' 'the blood, that saved her from a pack of Mexican hounds up the valley of the Rio, Pecos about es, low-necked waists, red slippers, six months ago. So we set off over the pampas, through heavily timbered districts, along small streams, on our way to the home of Jaquette's 20,000 acres. located in the shadow of the beautiful hills above named. At last we halted in front of the long low building, the home of the Jaquuette family, a distant relative of the original Austin, who was the largest landholder in his time in Texas.

Our horses was cared for, and we were introduced to the Don. He was 50 years of age; in looks he seemed but 35. Straight as an arrow, of the chase, politics and the cattle cold as an ice-berg, black-eyed and trade. Refreshments followed in black-haired, he looked a lord and master over all his people. The wife was bent and gray, but must have been beautiful in her younger years. Fully fifty young representative Texas drovers were in tents and in the outbuildings waiting

At 10 o'clock next day everything was prepared. We were shown into a large room of the house that looked more like a forest than a parlor. We were told to take refreshments lightly before the wedding ceremony. We were then conducted to the park or garden, a magnificent grove of cedar, pine, some orange, and maple.

Guests from far and wide had arrived in wagons and on horseback. Backwoods maidens and stalwart cattle-keepers, in staid and gay colors, sun-bonnets and buckskins, were chatting and gossiping under the trees, the same as church audiences in civilization. Everybody seemed of the plains suffered their broad sombreros to be ornamented with wreaths and their brows bound with gay handkerchiefs by fair and gentle called out: "Haven't any brandy left-have totake syrup!"

The man was a good man: He winked again in his amazement, and the boy replied: "Didn't I tell von we hadn't any brandy left? D'ye s'pose I'd lie about it?" "My-my son, you-you shouldn't shouldn't-" stammered the good man as all looked at him, and lo! in "Can I make brandy out of sarsafill me so full of pound-cake and the parilla and pincapple syrup?" yelled the boy. 'I tell you you've got to take plain soda till the boss comesback! "I-I didn't want any brandy." gasped the man. "Well, we don't keep anything stronger in the fountain, and I couldn't tell whisky from arnica if I was to look on the shelves!" growled the boy. "You'll find what you want in the saloon around the corner.' The winker winked all around the crowd, tried to explain his position, and then hustled out and boarded a street car. A Tradition of Saratoga Lake.

There is an Indian superstition attached to this lake which probably had its source in its remarkable loneliness and tranquillity. The Mohawks believed that its stillness was sacred to the Great Spirit, and that if a human voice uttered a sound upon its waters, the canoe of the offenders would instantly sink. A story is told of and English woman. in the early days of the first settlers, who had occasion to cross this lake with a party of Indians, who, before embarking, warned her most impressively of the spell. It was a silent. breathless day, and the canoe shot over the surface of the lake like an The Oakland (Cal.) Transcript gives arrow.
