OREGON CITY, OREGON, SEPT. 1, 1876.

The Office-Holders' Candidate.

Governor Hayes, in his letter of acceptance, declares that "honesty, capacity, and fidelity, constitute the only real qualifications for office," and "there is," he adds, "no other claim," by which he means that these are to be considered, and not merely party service in making appointments.

There are those who insist that Governor Hayes cannot be considered a veritable reform candidate unless he will promise on and after the fourth of March next to tuck up his shirt-sleeves, seize his ax, and decapitate all persons now holding place under the Washington Government.

Moreover the declaration of Gov. Hayes that "if elected he will not be a candidate for election to a second term," is highly important, because, should he keep his promise, he will avoid the temptation to use the patronage of his office in such a way as to promote his personal projects.

Reduce the Army.

In spite of the Sioux war, which is now assuming large proportions, and of the almost continual conflict which is going on along the Rio Grande, the cry "Reduce the Army," is still heard from Democratic demagogues and newspapers over the country, and even from Representatives on the floor of Congress.

In spite, however, of this fact so plainly and repeatedly set forth to public notice, the cry of retrenchment, principally for unbecome purposes, goes on, and there is reason to believe that the Democrats are in favor of impairing the efficiency of the force now enlisted, and prevent its attaining any considerable success against Sitting Bull and his combative followers.

Crediting in Journalism.

It is not often that we bend an ear in the same boat with the Evening Standard, but when it pulls for the goal that make it unnecessary to credit every little piece of State news or insignificant item taken from one paper by another, we most heartily aid its efforts and wish it God-speed.

The California farmers have taken up arms against a sea of speculation. The San Francisco wheat combination looked up gold, chartered vessels in advance of their arrival, ran down the price of wheat, and endeavored to bring the farmers to terms.

Gov. Hayes knows that, among his supporters there is a powerful and swiftly increasing body that demands reform upon the principles he proclaims. Tilden knows such body among his supporters, and he therefore carefully announces no principles whatever. He knows as every intelligent man in the country knows, that, with his partisans, "reform of the civil service" means turning out republicans and turning in democrats; and that this is the "Administrative reform" to which a Tilden administration would introduce us.—Harrison's Weekly.
