A CLOSE CALL,-Last Saturday evening, says the Portland Standard, an accident occurred on board the steamer McMinnwille while at her wharf in this city, which nearly resulted in the death of David Caufield, mate of the vessel. One of the buckets to the wheel required some temporary repair and he went inside the wheel house to investigate its condition. While there he found it impossible to accomplish the necessary work in consequence of the po-sition of the wheel, and being unable to turn it by hand, one of the men requested the engineer to give it a half revolution He started the machinery, and before Mr.
Caufield could effect his escape the large wheel revolved and carried him up and around and down into the water. He was catching the drowning man and bringing and conveyed it to the Odd Fellows' cemeratory, there to perform the last office which row and fortunate one, and has taught Dave to be more eareful in the future.
