We can conscientiously speak of the other features of the performance with favor. Tim Cohan is a very clever Irishman, sings, at least passably, acts quite naturally, and dances superbly. After Fim gave the audience the real old Irish jig, last evening, he took the house for all it was worth, and instantly established himself as a favorite. Miss Marie Poinier has a pleasant voice, and sings the Irish ballads quite effectively. Her apparent deficiency as a songstress is more than overcome by her acting and very clever dancing. Dutchisms by Dan P. Howard was exceedingly mirth prov king, and the hearty laughter he evoked and reeated encores won, furnished abundant proof that he succeeded in more than pleasing. As a Dutch comedian, Howard is scarcely inferior to Knight, who was such a favorite with Portlanders. For ecentric character sketches Mr. Harry Nicholson is certainly worthy of favor able mention. His character songs last evening of "Simple Simon," and "Old Joe," would not reflect discredit on Charley Vivian's happiest effort in that line. Everything considered, Mr. Howorth gives an entertainment instructive edifying, refined and pleasing. There is absence of everything which
