Sea Spoil.

CASES OF THE DESTRUCTIVE ACTION OF THE SEA.

Somewhat more than a year ago we called attention to the changes which are to be perceived in the relations of land and water, the action of rivers on the land and the influence of delta lands in restoring land to the earth being noted in the article alluded to, while the destructive action of the sea on many points of the coast was also detailed. In the present instance we propose to examine a few of the more typical cases of sea actions viewed in its destructive effect upon the land, and also some aspects of earth movements which undoubtedly favor the destructive powers of the ocean.

As regards these destructive powers much depends, of course, on the nature of the rock formation which lies next the sea. A hard formation will, ostensio passim, resist the attack of the waves to a greater extent than a deposit of soft nature, and the varying nature of the coast lines of a country determines to a very great extent the regularity or irregularity of the sea's action. In the case of the coast in which the ocean has acquired over the land an immense advantage in respect of the softness of the formations which favored its inroad is found on the Kenish coast. Visitors to Margate and Reculver—the two principal cases in which the ocean has acquired over the land an immense advantage in respect of the softness of the formations which favored its inroad is found on the Kenish coast. Why, here you are with a lofty structure on high ground, and in an open place and surrounded by rocks. There's everything here to produce an outpouring of lightning." The old man went outside, followed by the agent. Both looked up at the building. "You think there is danger, then?" asked the old gentleman, after a pause. "I don't think anything about it, my good sir. I know it. Common sense teaches me that a building situated like this is in danger. If I owned it, and a man should come along with this kind of a rod I would slip it on quicker'n you could say Jack Robinson. Why, I'd believe I was committing architectural suicide to delay the work any hour."

"You don't think it is so then to go through this season without the rods?" "I certainly do not. Why just look at it. Here you are in an exposed place, with a most elegant hotel. Everything in good shape and a healthy business before you. The future opens up to you like a path of gold. Suddenly there comes a storm, the lightnings play, the thunders roll suddenly, in a twinkling, there is a crash, and a most valuable property is swallowed up."

The agent's eyes were moist and his cheeks flushed. "What do you say?" he asked after a pause. "I don't know," replied Atechton, as a man deliberating. "You think the barn is in danger, too?" "Certainly. Nothing can save either of them, but if I owned it, if the buildings I wouldn't begin to think of taking the risk."

"I will," said the agent, putting up his book and rubbing his hands. "All right," said the old gentleman. "Put 'em on thick and fast, but not a rod on the barn. We'll let that go, you know. But cover the house, and when the barn is struck I'll pay you for the job."

Disposed Of.

A party named Atechton came up from New York last spring and built a house for summer boarders at Lake Lomond. He put up a three-story building with a French roof and piazza, and made a very fine place of it. He also erected a barn for stabling. Mr. Atechton was not an early riser, loving his bed too well to get out of it before noon. One morning in July last he was awakened from his slumber to see a man who was anxious to have a talk with the proprietor. Atechton seriously objected to breaking up his nap, but believing that the anxious party meant important business, he got up to receive him. The reader can fathom the old gentleman's disgust when he discovered that this visitor was a lighting-kick the intruder into the lake and go back to bed, but as that was scarcely within the limits of hospitality, to say nothing of the requirements of the law, the landlord smothered his wrath and patiently submitted to the action of the agent, who was a smooth-tongued and smooth-talking man. He said he had been most favorably impressed with the appearance of the place, which was really imposing, and he was confident that in two years or less the host would be doing what he felt justified in calling a "smashing business."

"But I see you haven't got any rods on your place. How's that?" The old man said he did not think he needed them. "There was a place that needed them more than this does," said the agent. "How's that?"

"Why, here you are with a lofty structure on high ground, and in an open place and surrounded by rocks. There's everything here to produce an outpouring of lightning." The old man went outside, followed by the agent. Both looked up at the building. "You think there is danger, then?" asked the old gentleman, after a pause. Sound Reasons for Faith.

The American people are shrewd and observant. They are not often deceived by sham pretensions of what they are, they soon discover their error. If Hostetter's Stomach Bitters had been a sham, they would long since have discarded it; but finding that there was no claim put forth in its behalf that its curative properties did not justify, they immediately gave it the preference over any other article of its class. Time has only served to strengthen their faith, and has increased its popularity to an extent almost beyond parallel, even in this age of successful proprietary medicines. It ranks foremost among the standard preparations of the day, and is endorsed by the medical fraternity and the newspaper press. It overcomes and prevents fever and ague and other malarial disorders with wonderful certainty, tones the system, banishes dyspepsia, remedies constipation and liver complaint, relieves gout, rheumatism, and affections of the bladder and kidneys.

REPTURE! THE CHINESE ORGAN. EVERY WORKINGMAN READ THIS. THE "CALL" AND THE WORKINGMEN.

At a meeting of the Workingman's Party held December 2d, the following resolutions were adopted: WHEREAS, The workingmen, as citizens of California and of the United States, possess the inalienable right of free speech in public meeting assembled, for the purpose of setting forth and endeavoring to obtain a redress of the grievances which threaten to overwhelm them; and whereas, the movement inaugurated by them is for the welfare of the general public, and particularly to prevent the white laboring man and mechanic and small farmer from being displaced by Chinese coolies under the control of monopolists; and whereas, the workingmen and their trusted leaders have been vilified, misrepresented and threatened by the newspapers which advocate the claims and defend the interests of the corporations and monopolists, as is evidenced by the extracts from the MORNING CALL, here given:

"The San Francisco Division of the National Labor Party of California, an organization quite apart from the Kearney ent-throat crowd, has published a platform and declaration of principles."—Call, November 3. "When thieves and murderers combine together for the taking of life and unlawfully appropriating other people's property, it becomes a necessity for communities to organize for self-protection."—Call, November 6. AND, WHEREAS, the workingmen have never contemplated any other means of redressing their grievances than proper and lawful ones, we hereby desire to denounce their libelous and slanderous as the worst enemies of the labor cause; therefore, be it Resolved, That the MORNING CALL of San Francisco, which was built up by the patronage of workingmen and advocated the interest of labor while controlled by journeymen printers, its former owners, has under its recent proprietorship become the organ and defender of corporations and monopolists; and is now UNWORTHY THE SUPPORT OF ANY LABORER OR MECHANIC who is opposed to the supplanting of white labor by Chinese Slaves. Resolved, That from this time henceforth we, the workingmen of this city, will by every means in our power rebuke the TRAITOROUS CALL, which has endeavored to sell us out to our enemies, and that we will WITHDRAW OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS AND ADVERTISING PATRONAGE. Resolved, That we call upon all labor organizations throughout the State to follow our example and administer such a lesson to the journalistic hypocrite as will prevent a repetition of the treason.
