Messers. Henderson and Stratton, of Portland, called last Monday. They came up to attend the masquerade.

The masquerade ball last Monday evening at Pope's Hall was a very enjoyable affair, and the attendance was large.

The time is rapidly approaching for the holding of primaries and the county convention, and everything points to the warmest campaign that has been seen in these parts for a good many years. Republican candidates are innumerable, while the Democratic candidates are very small in number, as they don't see any chance for success.

Mrs. Forbes' horse became restive, and Mr. Forbes caught hold of her bridle, and while the horses were jumping around both of the children were precipitated to the ground, receiving numerous bruses, but fortunately not of a dangerous nature.

CANEMAH POET. We took a peep last evening, To Watch them dance a while; The Lancers, Waltzes, Polkas, And everything in style. The first we here shall mention Is the negro from the South,

With patched up flowing trowsers, Big boots and bigger mouth. The next was pretty Huntress, With graceful, lovely form, Who played her part so nicely She took the hearts by storm.

We notice next an Indian, Huge, brawny, bold and brave; Who swings the Thomas hatchet, His red-browed tribe to save. Now comes the hour of Darkness,

Her figure robed in Night, Whereon were stars of silver, Most brilliant and bright. The Girl from the Isle of Cuba, With fine cigars in case, Her costume quite appropriate, A form of pleasing grace.

And once appeared the Doctor,
Rigged out for a rainy ride,
With gum coat, old umbrella,
And pill bag by his side.
Now comes the "joy of many
A soldier's home and band,"
The true Girl of the Regiment,
With costume neatly planned.

Who could beat the Sailors. Who plough the raging main; With outfit trim and shipshape, Two Sailors-two the same. There was wing sing China, And royal Yeddo Japs; For your life you couldn't tell 'em

From those copper-colored chaps, Many more we might mention, But space will not permit; And all, we know, enjoyed it, Until the music quit. Long will it be remembered, By me at any rate; for there, on that occasion, I think I met my fate.
