Small Japanese fans, opening just like the large one, and with a slender handle almost as fine as a hairpin, are new hair ornaments. ### The Turtle Trade.

"Ten cents-three for a quarter!" called a shabby looking man from New Jersey as he walked along Park Row yesterday carrying a large tin pail and a market

"Ten cents-three for a quarter!" he said again. Then he said it once more. "Twig the turtle!" exclaimed a small boy who had peered into the pail. The man stopped, and looked about uneasily for the policeman who might order him to "move on," dipped his hand deep into the pail. Clawing about, he presently brought to the surface of the half gallon of dirty water a hearing and squirming handful of live mud turtles. "Ten cents," he said. The black and hard-shelled reptiles tumbled about in a hying mass, and scrambled wildly toward the edge of the backet.

"Get back there!" said the turtle vender savagely, and the turtles he slapped on the nose got back without ado. The on the nose got back without ado. turtles were black. Some were twice the diameter of a trade dollar, and some were no larger than a dollar. The heads were striped with bright yellow.

Several gentlemen stopped, looked on a moment, and bought turtles which they dropped into their pockets. "Where do they come from." asked

"How do you catch them?" "They live in the swamps and I catch em with a net. Sometimes I can steal out on a fallen tree, or a log, and scoop in two or three without getting into the mud above my waist. Usually I don't calculate on getting off so easily. They're quick little varments, and if you make the first bit of racket as you'ry to come to em when they're sunning themselves on logs, why, they'r into the water so quick you can't remember what you're

Some people prefer the shells to the live turtles, for they can make pincusions of the shells." "Is it not a new industry to peddle turtles?

Yes. I never met any one else in that line of trade. There isn't money enough in it. Heaven only knows what they are good for. But people seem to want them, and far be it from me to stand in the way of a man having anything he wants if I can sell it to him. -

Spoopendyke's Picture Hauging.

"Well, my dear," says Mr. Spoopen-dyke, with a nail in his mouth, and balancing himself waveringly on a diningroom chair, "all you've got to do now is to get your picture ready, and I'll show you how to hang the thing."

"It's awful sweet of you, pet," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, alternately rubbing the frame of a very heetic chromo and sucking the thumb she had been bammering for the last twenty maintes. "It's awful sweet and thoughtful of you, dear, to offer your assistance at such a time, to offer your assistance at such a time, for I do believe I never would have got a nil driven in that stupid wall."

"Of course you wouldn't, my dear!" laughed Mr. Spoopendyke. "Who ever saw a woman that could drive a nail? You couldn't drive a galvanized carpettact in a 'leven-pound bladder of putty. And speaking of driving nails, I'd like to know if you're ever going to hand up that hammer, or meat-pounder, or what-It is proposed that the Great Eastern—originally called the Leviathan—be brought to New York and fitted up as a summer hotel.

"Oh, its a stove-hook, is it? said Mr. Spoopendyke, regarding the weapon with sinister expression. "Now, if you'd handed me that dog-iron, or a pair of steelyards, I'd have been right at home; but a stove-hook! Really, my dear, I'd rather undertake to drive a nail with a seythe-handle."

"But the wall's so soft and lovely, dear, it really drives them beautifully,
—if they would only stick," said Mrs.
Spoopendyke, reassuringly.
"Only stick!" said Mr. Spoopendyke, aged that."

"Oh yes," said Mr. Spoopendyke:
"that's the way you managed it! and you have punched enough holes up here to play cribbage in. Will you glume an-other nail? Don't you see I've knocked this one flat, and can't unpry it up again?"

"Can't unpry it up again!" ejaculated Mrs. Spoopendyke, in a very gentle voice, handing him another nail, "Can't unpry it up again! Well, if that

The Peacock and the Oyster,

One day an Oyster set out to cross a neck of land to save himself a long swim around it, and as he journeyed along the dusty highway he suddenly heard a harsh voice crying out for him to halt. As he rolled into the shade of a pig-weed, a Peacock advanced with lordly strut and emanded:

"How now, sirrah! Where are you oing and what is your errand?" 'I'm simply crossing from water to ater, and tired enough I am. I believe have been three good hours making half a mile.

"Three hours! Why, I could strut over the distance in three minutes! Ah, me, but you don't amount to much for

"And you aren't the least bit pretty. "That's true. My shell is coarse and full of ridges.

"And you can't sing?" "Not a note."

"Nor fly?" "Not a fly."

"Well, well, I really pity you, Now, then, if you want to see something gaudy, net enze on me. The bird strutted up and down, head up and tail spread out, and the Oyster was compelled to say that it was a sight to do sore eyes good. "While you creep, I walk, strut and

"While you whisper, I sing."

"While you tumble around in the mud and sand, I reflect all the colors of the rainbow on the lawn,"

'I must admit it," sighed the Oyster. "And while a pig-weed shelters you, it takes a whole apple tres to give me shade. You see-

And the Oyster saw. An Eagle had been looking for a breakfast. The humble Oyster, hidden away under the weed, escaped his piercing glances, but the gorgeous Peacock was instantly seen and spotted. There was a whirr, a scream, and the Eagle had ascended with the vain-glorious bird fast in his claws.

"Come to think it all over," said the Oyster, as he squinted his larboard eye aloft, "it is about as well to be an oyster under a pig-weed as a peacock in the claws of an eagle. I guess I'll move on."

MORAL. - Those who were born to strut should not exult over those who were born to creep.

Meeting Dea h Brave y.

The Niobrara (Nebraska) Pioneer says: Mr. G. Wiard, who has just returned from ONeill City, informs us that the two Biglow brothers, who resided in town for awhile this spring be fore going to their homesteads, near Atkinson, Holt county, were buried in a well at that place on the 28th ult. by the caving in of the quicksand through which the well had been sunk, the curbwhich the well had been sunk, the cuto-ing not being of sufficient strength to resist the pressure. Although one was severely injured by the timbers, he sur-vived until the Saturday morning following, and the other, who was not injured, lived until that evening, when their strength was exhausted and death released them from misery. Although 28 feet from the surface of the ground they could easily make them-selves heard, and gave directions regard-ing the disposal of their property, advising their wives who were sisters, to go back to their old home East, where they would be happier and more comfortable There were more rescuers than could work at a time, and frequent changes of hands were made, all being done that mortal could do, but of no avail, the brothers being fully aware that help could not reach them in time. They died calmly and manfully, taking their fate as true men do. They were exhumed Sunday and buried the same day.

KOUMISS. - Into one quart of new milk put one gill of fresh buttermilk and three or four lumps of white sugar. Mix well and see that the sugar dissolves. Put in warm place to stand ten hours, when it will be thick. Pour from one vessel to another until it becomes smooth and uniform in consistency. Bottle and keep in warm place twentyfour hours, it may take thirty-six in winter. The bottles must be tightly corked and the corks tied down. Shake well five minutes before opening. It makes a very agreeable drink, which is especially recommended for persons who do not assimilate their food. Instead of buttermilk, some use a teaspoonful of yeast. Made from mare's milk, it is the standard beverage of the Tartars, who almost live upon it in summer, and is also used largely by the Russians. The richer your milk, which should be un-skimmed, the better will be your koumiss.- Food and Health.
