THE BEST

Hair restorative in the world is HALL'S HAIR RESTORE. It cures all diseases of the scalp, and stimulates the hair glands to healthy action. It stops the falling of the hair; prevents its turning gray; cures baldness, and restores youthful color and freshness of appearance to heads already white with age. The following are a few illustrations of those who have done by

HAIR RESTORE:

—Mrs. M. BROWN, 244 Franklin Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I have a severe attack of Erysipelas in the head, from my hair—already gray—falling out rapidly. I have used your Hair Restorer, and it has done me a great deal of good. It has brought my hair to its natural color and thickness as when I was a girl."

—Mr. KELLOGG, an old farmer, near Warren, Ind., had severely gray hair, and what little that was left, he had become entirely white. The bottle of HALL'S HAIR RESTORE stopped his falling out, and gave him a thick, luxuriant head of hair, as brown and thick as he ever had.

—Mrs. A. T. WALL, Greenfield, Cheshire, Eng., writes: "I have found the greatest benefit from the use of HALL'S HAIR RESTORE. It has restored my hair, which was rapidly falling out, and returned its original color."

—Dr. E. B. STEWART, Detroit, Mich., writes: "I have found the greatest benefit from the use of HALL'S HAIR RESTORE. It has restored my hair, which was rapidly falling out, and returned its original color."

—Mrs. R. E. ELLIOTT, Glendale, W. Va., writes: "The bottle of HALL'S HAIR RESTORE restored my hair to its natural, youthful color. No injurious substances enter into the composition of HALL'S HAIR RESTORE, and it is not a dye. Its vegetable ingredients render it in the highest degree beneficial to the scalp as a preventive of disease. Its effects are natural and lasting, and it does not make the hair dry and brittle, like the so-called restoratives compounded with alcohol."

ONLY TOLD WHAT SHE HAD HEARD.

Says Mrs. Brown, of St. Louis, Mo.: "I may or may not be; I only tell—West folks have told me."

"They say that wife And his young wife Got on quite a while, dear; They could not fight Both day and night—Or that is was I hear."

"And who would think That snail should drink The way he does, good Lord! Or so they say!"

My dear, I say! You will not say, my dear."

"And there's his wife, The steady wife, / She's a wicked sister; I've heard such frightful things, It makes me bring To tell them; 'pon my word."

"Oh, dear, they say The other day That Rev. Dr. Ely, And Miss Monticm Went arm-in-arm Down Broadway—so I heard."

Says Mrs. Jones, in exulting tones: "You have quick ears, my dear; Just fill them full With cotton wool; You hear to make I fear."

MY HEART IS GLIEN.

Overcast will thou Forever be my Valentine? Sweetest, my dear, and ardent vow Is thine alone; you dear one, only thine. Faces eyes are like the sun and night. Thy skin is soft and pure and white As Winter's snow of drifted snow, And all that sort of thing, you know, While 'round my merry quips, I wait for nothing sign That in thy glances, Thou'll ever be my Valentine. —Boston Folio.

COSTLY CONDOLENCES.

It is reported that it cost Mrs. Logan over $30 to pay the expenses of the telegrams of condolences sent her. Her home is outside the city boundary, and the telegraph companies charge ten cents each, whether they were prepaid or not, for delivering them. She received several hundred, and strange to say, many were sent "collect." It seems strange that messages of condolence or congratulation should be sent "collect," but it often happens.

Out of the thousands of telegrams of congratulation received by Mr. Garfield upon his nomination at Chicago, in 1880, many were marked "collect." It is my recollection, however, that the telegraph company in that case canceled the charges. Most of these were sent by people who either did not know the amenities or did not care for them, but many were sent unthinkingly or through some inadvertence. It would make some people uneasy even yet to know that their fervent and effusive communications reached Mr. Garfield marked "collect."

One noted gentleman in particular sent a very long and enthusiastic message that bore the word "collect" cancelled at it. Soon after the sender was a candidate for a high position under the president, and, as I knew him well and liked him, I took occasion to tell him about the telegram, feeling sure there was a mistake somewhere. He was as demoralized and disgusted a man as one could imagine.

He explained at once to Mr. Garfield that he had sent the dispatch from a hotel in New York, and supposed it had been charged to him in his bill, as directed. He was not appointed, though whether the "collect" dispatch had anything to do with his failure he never knew. Another "collect" dispatch to Mr. Garfield was from one of the most noted American actors, who was an intimate friend and great admirer of Garfield, and he would have been mortified beyond expression had he known about the matter. Another of the "collect" telegrams was from a millionaire senator, and another was from a great railroad and telegraph magnate and millionaire from New York. That was the most singular one of all, and it was suspected that some of the high officials of the telegraph company did it as a joke upon the sender.

NEARING COMPLETION.

A gentleman from Ashland reports that trains will run into Ashland, on the California and Oregon railroad, on and after to-day. The stage from Ashland will connect with the train at Ashland, and the distance between Ashland and Montague is only fifty miles. An immense force is at work, and in a week or ten days track will be laid, and ten miles further on, and they will advance the staging to about forty miles. From Montague to the Sierrita mountains there is about twenty-five miles of comparatively level country, in which the road can be built very rapidly. The road is to be pushed to an early completion, and it is predicted that it will be completed to a junction with the Oregon and California by July 1st, 1887.

The latest concerning the sale of the Oregon and California railroad to the Southern Pacific company is taken from the Railway Age of January 28th. It reads as follows:

The Oregon and California first mortgage bondholders are to receive at the rate of 110 in exchange for their present bonds, guaranteed both principal and interest, by the Southern Pacific company, together with 44 in cash for each bond. These new bonds, to be issued at the rate of $20,000 per mile, are to be secured by a new mortgage, equivalent in point of lien and priority to the existing first mortgage of the Oregon and California, and will bear interest from July 1, 1886. The Oregon and California preferred stockholders will receive one share of Central Pacific stock for every two shares of their own stock, together with 4 shillings sterling for each preferred share, and the common stockholders will get one Central Pacific share for every four of their own shares, together with three shillings sterling for each common share.

There are many good reasons why the state of Oregon should call a constitutional convention to revise and amend some weak points in our present fundamental law. It has worked admirably during the youth of our state, when economy was imperative, but now that Oregon takes higher rank and acquires more population, some changes would be advisable to correspond with present and future conditions. The people would have the ultimate voice in accepting or rejecting the work of such a convention, and it seems as if they could be depended on to do right in their decision, and there is a strong feeling of security in the present constitution, and a fear that some political juggler might work evil in framing new provisions and inducing the acceptance of the new work by the people. The points to be amended are not many, and it would seem that different sections could be framed by legislation, as has already been done, and submitted to the popular vote. This would place every proposed amendment on its own merit, and not depend on the whole of a whole convention. With harmony of action and statesmanship exercised, it is necessary to effect all that is necessary.—Ex.

CHILDREN ASKING MONEY.

Children cannot begin too young to earn money. If it is only a little—one egg for every dozen they find, pay for carrying the milk, a few cents per week for washing dishes, or bringing in the wood or coal or kindlings; so much for every towel they hem; or they may keep hens of their own, or a pig, or care for their own calf along with the other cattle how much more interest they will take. There are an infinite number of ways in which a child can earn money, and that too, without paying him for his little kindness to the poor people either, and then he has an inexpressible feeling of pride and independence when he buys something with his own earnings. There is no better servant in the world than this same money, but to be of the most use, it must be rightly managed, and only experience can teach that lesson properly.—Ex.

DR. A. BROWN, United States Navy, states

in the Medical Record that he has found a specific for the troublesome eruption produced by the poison oak or poison tree so common in our woods and old fences. This specific he finds in bromine, which he has used with unvarying success in at least forty cases. He uses the drug dissolved in olive oil, camelline or glycerine in the strength of ten to twenty drops of bromine to the ounce of oil, and rubs the mixture on the affected parts two or three times a day. The bromine is so volatile that the solution should be renewed every twenty-four hours. The eruption never extends after the first thorough application, and it promptly disappears within twenty-four if the application is persisted in.

At a meeting of the directors of the Northern Pacific railroad company, held at New York on the 23rd ult., vice-president Oakes stated that many farmers in Dakota living west of the Missouri river, had lost all their crops last season by drought and hail, and recommended that the company appropriate $100,000 to purchase 100,000 bushels of wheat and 60,000 bushels to be loaned to those people. It was so ordered, and those unfortunate will get a chance to retrieve their losses.

Every farm should plant not less than one acre of potatoes, as they make a most excellent food for all kinds of stock. Where they do not bring a paying price they can be fed to stock to good advantage.

Will some practical farmer figure out the profit there is in wheat raising, taking into account the capital invested, and all other items of expense?

THE FARM.

Business Farming.

How many agriculturists run their farms on strict business principles? And farming is as much a business as wagon building; more, in fact, for a larger and more varied experience is required; and there are a greater number of technical points to be mastered. Three requisites for success in manufacture are capital, good business management (attention to little things), and ability to dispose of the products of manufacture at remunerative prices. And the lack of any one of these three may alone be responsible for failure to make either manufacturing or farming pay. The lack of a little capital may keep a farmer's nose to the grindstone the year round, and prevent him from taking advantage of opportunities which frequently occur to enlarge his income; the lack of business management makes his work a continual grind, and eats up the profits that should be derived from his own labor and the labors of those he employs; and by failure to keep posted regarding the markets, or from necessity to realize at once, he is always compelled to sell "short."

A farmer goes to a carpenter to have a hen house built. The worker-in-wood immediately figures on the amount of lumber required for the job, and the quantity of nails and other hardware needed; he estimates carefully the time it will take to build it, and considers what outside help he must have; and, lastly, he charges a per centage on the cost of the lumber and the wages of the men he employs. The lumber, wages for himself and men, and margin of profit for wear and tear of tools, etc., having been summed up, he is able to tell at once what the structure will cost; and when he receives his order to go ahead with the work, he knows pretty nearly how much he is going to make out of it before a blow has been struck.

Now, in like manner, the farmer gives himself a contract to produce a certain amount of grain. But does he ever sit down to estimate the cost of seed and fertilizers, or endeavor to ascertain what the labor of cultivation and harvesting will amount to? And does he ever think of the margin of profit to cover interest on investment, wear and tear of tools, etc? Perhaps the two cases are widely different, from the nature of things, but, for all that, it is a fact that few American farmers know when their produce is sold, whether they have made money or lost money by having produced it.

Turn sharp corners. Study to make the most of everything; systematize all farm work that there will be no lost hours, and no wasted moments through mistakes that a little foresight would have avoided, or through the imperfections of old tools and worn out machinery. Attend to everything promptly; buy for cash and save money, though always buy the best, for a poor thing is dear at any price. Don't hire a dollar-and-a-half man for two dollars and let him have one of the boys' half of the time to wait on him. That is the way plumbers get rich, for their patrons pay the wages and they make a profit on both man and "helper"—the shoe is on the other foot in farming, however.

In these days of close competition, every farm transaction or operation should be brought under systematic analysis that every dollar spent may be made to yield a fair profit, and if the dollar is turned over two or three times, two or three profits should ensue. Reduce everything to a money value, and it will be an easy matter on the first of January to deduct the year's expenses from the year's income, and the balance, if any, will show how much has been made. And, should this balance barely cover personal expenses for the year, the farmer is only making a living, and had better look into things and see where he can increase his "
