Tying Up Branches.

Now is the time to tie together the limbs of those trees, both fruit and ornamental, that have made a long spreading growth, and whose limbs fork out. By tying all the limbs together about a foot up from where they leave the trunk, they are prevented from breaking or splitting down with the snows and ice storms of winter, as well as by strong winds. Use a stout, soft string, and it will not cut into or chafe the tree.
