Humors of Journalism.

The "humors of the campaign," manifested in the course of the Democratic papers of our State, are rather interesting and instructive, as indicating the tendency of the times and illustrating the utter demoralization which has overtaken the perty and foreshadows its defeat. The Democrat is manfully and with some degree of ability proving to a demonstration that the favorite Democratic dogma of repudiation is both wicked and absurd. In the prosecution of that righteous throry Bellinger has utterly demolished the Herald. The work was begun too late, however, he should have demolished the Convention that so greedily seized repudiation and fastened it upon the party. Bellinger is more Quizotic than the veri table old Don ever is said to have been. Watkinds, as a second Sancho Panza, endeavors to back up the denial of repudiation in Grover's Organ, but the ol scenity of that journal cultivates a Democratic element that even repudiation could never reach. Meanwhile the Herald is simply idiotic. The sense of darger and apprehension of defeat, and failure to get the State printing to do, these things have "overcome it like a summer cloud," and what little wit it had, and imported from Salem, has no longer a trace of reason in it. Prove this for yourselves by forcing your eye to peruse any of its atttempts at wit.

We admire the spirit of the Democrat in "taking up arms against a sea of troubles," but it is too late in the day, to "by opposing end them." We admire the spirit of the man who struck Billy Patterson, also of the other man who

On the Trade.

The Democracy of the State, who have put their ticket in the field in good faith, will be pleased to learn that the Salem clique and the Grover Organ are working simply for the election of L. F. Grover as Governor, and are devoting their energies entirely and exclusively to that end. If there is such a principle known as " honor among thieves." the "association ' have never learned it. They are satisfied that the situation is precarious, and to be or not to be successful in electing Grover, is the question they ponder. Mr. Slater will be delighted to learn that any

An Unfair Attack.

O'Meara pretends to have discovered from the business manager of Grover's Organ that the leading editorials of that classic sheet are furnished by the founder of the " Oregon style" bimself. We are aware that, to keep the "style" he organized alive in the affections of the people, he agreed to join the "association," so far as providing the sinews of war, and assisted in making the preliminary arrangements, but that was only from a corps d'esprit. No one who knows him will believe (?) that while he vigorously denies having responsibility for its editorials, he is so cowardly as to skulk behind his iron front and plated glass windows and make obscene attacks upon political opponents. It is some other person who furnishes the malice and the data to point the indecency of those graceful parsgraphs. Wby should be waste even money on a party that as fully repudiates him as it would the national debt. Every dog has his day, and if he should really be the author of the Grover editorials, it is because he fails to recognizze that his day is past. He would only resemble some worn out canine who, having been vicious and wicked in his prime, is still vengeful enough in toothless, purblind old age to snarl at all humanity and bay the moon. When this man assails, it will be in open day, as it has been before, and probably with about the same effect. In the words the immortal bard, "Prythee ! Go marry."

The Candidates and the Roughs.

Yesterday the steat. er Reliance came up the river bringing three distinguished democrats. Mr. Fleischner, candidate for State Treasurer, Mr. Patterson, ditto for State Printer, and Judge Stout, who once represented Oregon Democracy in the Lower House of Congress and is now a prominent aspirant for the United States Senate. These gentlemen were apparently in charge of some half a dozen roughsdemocratic voters. of course-and evidently were coaveying them to some point on the upper river where their services are needed on election day. The wouldbe-Senator was check by jowl with the emigrating crowd, and with the greatest familiarity entertained them and was entertained in turn. The 'intelligent voters had a bottle, or ever so many bottles, full of liquor, no doubt furnished by the lib. erality of the distinguished gentlemen who stood guard and stood treat siter. nately. Occasionally the Senatorial aspirant tipped the bottle with them on the
