MEMORIAL DAY.

The Graves of the Nation's Dead Decorated.

PROCESSION TO THE CEMETERY.

The Grand Army Boys, "A" Co. from Whiteaker, K. of P., and Numerons Carriages in Line.

Monday was celebrated in this city as it was in most of the cities of the United States, as Memorial Day.

This day has been set apart, by the congress of the United States, as a national, and, by the governor of Oregon, by proclamation, as a legal state holiday. The day has been set apart for the purpose of decorating the graves of the dead soldiers of our nation, who died that the nation might live, and for suitable exercises in commemoration of their patriotism and service.

The day has been looked forward to for some time, as a holiday, by all classes of laboring humanity, and the expecta-tion of a large crowd attending the extion of a large crowd attending the exercises conducted under the auspices of

Early in the morning, people began to arrive from all parts of the country adjacent to town, and soon the streets wore an air of a gala day.

The boys of Company A, 2d regt., 2d brig., O. S. M., began to arrive at an early hour, and reported at the armory of Company B, where some arrangements had been made for their comfort. At brig., O. S. M., began to arrive at an had been made for their comfort. At 10:30 a. m., the entire company in full uniform, had reported, and were taken to Strong's restaurant, at 11:40 a. m., where entertainment had been provided for them, by Sedgwick Post, G. A. R.

The parade formed in front of G, A. R. hall, on Commercial street, at 1:30 p. m. A company was the first on the ground, and soon Central lodge, No. 18, Knights of Pythias, in their bright uniforms of helmet and plame, red belts and glisten-ing side arms (which made a very pretty show in the bright sua), followed, and the band wheeled into line from their hall, on State street. The line then formed with the H. A. C. band in the le.id. in wed by Co. A, the Knights of Pythias, and the colors of the United States supported by Sedgwick Post, G.

The line of march towards the 1, O. O. F. cemetery, was then taken up, the orders named followed by a long line of carriages, and the sidewalks crowded with people, who were en route to that "city of the dead," to show respect, and to pay tribute to those who died, that this nation might be unbroken, with "no north, no south, no east no west," but north, no south, no east no west, one confederation of states, under one government, and one flag.

The road to the cemetery is long, and the roads were dusty and hot; but, as all things must have an end, so did the march to the cemetery; and, on reaching there, the military and K. of P. presented arms, and the members of the Grand Army filed past them to the post of honor, about the speakers' stand, and from the choir, led by Prof. Parvin, was followed by the ritualistic service of the Grand Army of the Republic. Then followed the address of T. H. which he referred to those who were slain in the field of battle, paying them the eause for which they fought, as one "more just, and its triumph infinitely more important to this continent and to the world, than were the cause and tri-umph of those they met in the dreadful ordeal of battle." He said the duty of the G. A. R. was to keep alive the memory of those who died in the cause. He spoke of the thrilling spectacle of men "marching with steady step, and un-yielding resolve, to battle and to death for any cause; but, when the wager of battle is the destiny of a great nation, and the best interests of humanity and civilization, the spectacle be-comes thrilling beyond any oth-er earthly spectacle". He said that had "ours been the lost cause, the hope slavery, and millions more unborn," would have been crushed, and the possibilities of political, intellectual, and moral improvement and achievement would have been closed to them forever. He spoke of the line that would have existed between the "two nations." spoke of the feelings of Christianity toward human slavery, and said all Christian effort would have been cast at its overthrow. Yet under two flags, the horrible institution of slavery could only have been perpetuated. The entire work of that government would have been used in favor of its perpetuation. They would have kept armies trained for the purpose of the support of that institution. He said that the prejudices and passions of the war had not yet entirely passed away, but when they do, "then the service we and they rendered to all the ingrudgingly recognized by our people, from the ice-bound north to the ever-green south." He then referred to the terests of our whole country will be un-He then referred to the possibilities, had two nations existed instead of one—how they would have been as the playthings of all other nations on the globe. "If this country is to have Captain Commanding. patriotic defenders, in the future, who will maintain our institutions and the liberties of the people, under every vicis-situde of fortune, where, if need be, the flames of battle burn with a devouring intensity yet unknown upon earth, we must keep alive and fragrant the memory of the men who perished in battle that our country and institutions might live." He said all true Americans desired to "bury mon brotherhood of all the people, be-neath one flag; but, in order to do this, Burnett, neath one flag; but, in order to do this, Burnett, secretary, to-day. He believed there was still patriotism He believed there was still patriotism in the breasts of the people of this nation, and felt sure the nation would not lack in support, or defense, in case such was needed.

He closed by saying: "To-day the surviving soldiers of the Union army—many of whom were only boys in 1861, howe in arms are pays in stature boys.

boys in appearance, boys in stature, boys in age, boys in every thing but in practical valor—in this they were equal to the veterans of a hundred battles—at the graves of our fallen comrades renew our vows-never broken-we made in 1861, give to our country the highest and best service we can render until we can serve no longer. And when we, too, shall fall and rest from conflict and struggle, our monument—the wonder and admiration of the whole world-shall be our deathless Union, illuminated with all the institutions of civilization which bless us, and shall bless posterity forever.

After the address, the choir sang our national hymn "America," and the exer-cises closed with prayer. The procession then moved back to this city.

On Sunday a large concourse of people gathered at Marion square, to bear the memorial services. Rev. J. A. Hollenbaugh made an excellent address, and Revs. Rugg, Muellhaupt, Webb, and

The students more than verified. would have taken part in the parade, but for the death of one of their number-Nancy Amos, a Nez Perce, of quick consumption, yesterday morning. Following is the roster of A company, giving the names of those who took part in the parade:

Downing, Locke, Jue. Downing, H. Downing, and Ware. The boys looked well in their nent uniforms, and their services in the parade were duly and well appreciated.

The presence of Central lodge, K, of P., was also conducive of a good deal of pleasure to the onlookers, and to the nunugers of the parade. The graves of the dead soldiers at the cemetery were beautifully decorated, as were also many private graves. The grave of Hon. Samuel R. Thurston, Oregon's first' delegate to congress, was handsomely remembered, and many beautiful floral offerings bedecked its surface and surroundings.

SAD DROWNING.

Miss Lizzie Harrison, of Jefferson, the Victim, throughas Peculiar Accident.

On last Saturday, May 29th, Miss. Lizzie Harrison, daughter of Hon. John Harrison, who lives about three miles west of Jefferson, in this county, was drowned. In the afternoon she started out strawberrying, and coming to a slough in the Santiam bottom, she removed her shoes their dead comrades' graves. The band and stockings and started to wade to an then played a beautiful dirge, and a song island, on which she knew there was an abundance of delicious berries. The water running very swift, she was washed down and drowned. The alarm was Henderson, department chaplain, in which he referred to those who were recovered till Sunday morning about 10 a glowing tribute. He next referred to water. The water where she was wading was only eighteen or twenty inches deep, but very swift. Deceased was a graduate of the Willamette university, of the class of 1866, and had many friends and acquaintences in Salem.

After music by the band, J. P. Robertson, on the part of the "prohibitionists," opened the ball, and was followed by Culver, on of freedom for 4,000,000 souls then in the part of the republicans, and Holmes, on the part of the democrats. > Baseball Games .- In the game against the Salem Flouring Mills club yesterday, the Capitol Flouring Mills club was victorious, by a score of 84 to 33. The game caused considerable sport. The game between the grocery and drygoods clerks resulted in favor of the grocery clerks by a score of 37 to 32. The games were not overly "scientifique."

A diagnosis of the dis-ease developed the fact that Mr. Powell is afflicted with what is commonly called mind paralysis, the effect of which is to completely destroy the memory, though it does not necessarily interfere with the action of the mind as regards present events or thoughts. Uncle David is able to think as intelligently as ever he could, but his memory of things past is com-pletely shattered.

THE COMING TOURNAMENT. -- The Astorian fire department will go into training for the coming tournament some time next week. The Albany department will begin soon. It is about time the Salem laddies were beginning to look out for things. Capital Engine company holds its regular election to-morrov night, and that company will probably start same preparations. It was removed that Tiger Engine company would not have a hose team out this year, but the rumor was probably premature. boys want to wake up soon, and start the ball a rolling. If Salem has the doing of any thing like this, none of the work must be done by halves. The tourna-ment must be as successful as its prede-cessors, at least, and work will be neces-sary for making it successful.

IMPROVEMENTS.—The street supervisor has made a good start in the street improvement, on Commercial street, between Trade and Ferry, on Trade street. Trade street has been leveled according to the new survey. And Commercial street is now being rounded and leveled The work should be extended the full length of Commercial street, and, if possible, this season should see State and Court streets improved.

FELL FROM A SCAFFOLD .- The vicinity of Brooks was startled one day last week by the news that E. M. Savage had met with quite a severe accident, while re-pairing his granary. He fell from a scaffold about sixteen feet high, striking with his chest on a box. It is thought, however, that no bones were broken. The injury was a painful one, but not serious; and it is hoped he may soon be out again.

The sewer has become clogged up, in some way, and the stench which this hot weather causes to arise therefrom, would kill a common man at forty yards, "off-hand." This ditch should be cleared out, and fixed so it could be flushed semi-occasionally.
