The Telephone. In merry tone. "Hello, my dear Miss."

THEY WERE ONE.

A Story of the Ring.

BY W. H. L. ATKINSON.

Twenty-five years ago a circus was not such an overgrown affair as it now is.

Twenty-five years ago I was a middle-aged man and a doctor, but I venture to say that I knew almost as much about the management of a circus as I did of pills and prescriptions.

When a very young man, just after receiving my diploma and while the mystic letters M. D. tacked to the end of my name were still a pleasing novelty, I became engaged to the prettiest girl in the village.

I think I loved Annette too well to mistrust her. I always believed in girls, and boys too, having lots of fun, so long as there was no wickedness back of it.

I have said that we became engaged to be married. We were to wait two years, during which time I hoped to build up a practice which should warrant me in taking to myself a wife and home of my own.

About that time a very small, "one-horse" circus visited our village and made a two days' stand.

After the show left town, Annette and "Leon" doubtless corresponded, though I never knew it.

Twenty years passed away, and I was a lonely man on the shady side of forty.

Of course I went. There was no printed programme, but toward the end of the performance the ring-master announced with a loud voice, "Mademoiselle Annette, the Parisian prodigy, champion lady bare-back rider of the world!"

My ears could not have deceived me. He did say "Annette," but, then, a thousand chances to one it was not my Annette.

Ha! the curtain across the entrance is pushed back, the ringmaster cracks his whip with a great and sounding crack, and two milk-white steeds center into and around the ring.

Then the apology for a band starts up, and, as the horses near the entrance to the ring once more, a gaudily though scantily attired girl rushes out, and, amid a cracking of whips, "hurrahs" from the circus men, and a shrill "hoop-la!" from herself, leaps at a bound to the back of one of the horses.

But it is not Annette—at least not my Annette. This is quite a young girl; I can tell that, used as I am to the "make-up" of circus fairies, etc.

Mademoiselle goes through the hundred and one tricks in which a circus-rider usually shows off her powers. Her last trick is to bound through rings of fire made by steeping iron rings in coal-oil or some other inflammable liquid.

Her flimsy dress caught fire, and missing the horses, she fell heavily to the ground—a huddled heap of burning silk and game.

Knowing that my professional services might be required, I was in the ring in an instant. The fire was speedily extinguished, and the limp crushed form was carried tenderly to the "dressing-room," where I examined her.

The girl must have been a favorite, judging from the eagerness with which men and women crowded around to know how she was—the women inside and the men at the entrance of the so-called "dressing-room."

After a careful examination I had to report to the manager a broken arm and severe spinal injuries.

It was not altogether disinterested pity which prompted me to insist on having the injured girl taken to my house. For, inside her dress, fastened to a silken cord, I found a tiny package which aroused my curiosity.

I could not help somehow connecting her name and the package with myself. So she was carried up to my house, and for several days my old housekeeper and I devoted the greater part of our time to the sick girl. I was fearful that she would be a cripple for the rest of her life, and so I had a celebrated Philadelphia physician come down to see her.

Annette was very pretty; not at all coarse in any way, while her conversation indicated that she was far from an ignorant girl.

For a second time, I think, I was in love. Once or twice I ventured to ask Annette something of her parents and of her life, but she was very reticent and I thought I could wait to know.

My Dear Doctor, Good-bye. I have gone for good, and have taken an unusual way of thanking you for your kindness.

"Once more, good-bye, and thanks," "ANNETTE."

No, I am not married, neither have I attended a circus for twenty-five years. I am shy, rather, of a woman and a circus.

A GRAND SUCCESS.

Two or three actors who were stranded in Chicago last week reached Detroit the other day, having got thus far on their way east.

"Why don't you pawn that diamond pin?" was asked when he hinted at a loan.

"How about your watch?" "Nothing at the end of this brass chain," he replied as he drew out the pin which held it in his pocket.

"Well, what did you go into business for, anyway? This is the fifth or sixth time you have been busted."

"Exactly, my friend, but if you only knew how often I was busted as a house painter you'd believe I was making a grand success of this."

THE NIGHT EDITOR.

"Mme. Adam, the well-known French journalist," says the exchange, "writes from midnight until 4 a. m. Her dress in her study consists of a negligé costume of white silk with pearls about her neck instead of a collar, and with red kid slippers on her feet."

Twenty years passed away, and I was a lonely man on the shady side of forty. "The Great Monster Imperial Circus," from a triumphal tour through Europe, was advertised to make a stand in Corvaille.

Ha! the curtain across the entrance is pushed back, the ringmaster cracks his whip with a great and sounding crack, and two milk-white steeds center into and around the ring.

HE WENT INSIDE.

Little Johnny, aged five, was taken with the circus posters and begged his papa to take him to the circus.

BILL NYE'S BUDGET.

HUNTING AN ICHTHYOSAURUS.

Several years ago I had the pleasure of joining a party about to start out along the banks of Bitter creek on a hunting expedition.

The leader of the party was a young man who recently escaped from college with a large amount of knowledge which he desired to experiment with on the people of the far west.

I had been in the west some eight or nine years then, and I had never seen an ichthyosaurus myself, and I thought the young man must know his business, so I got out my Winchester and went along with the group.

We tramped over the pale, ashy, glaring, staring stretch of desolation, through burning, quivering days of monotony, and sagebrush, and alkali water, and aching eyes, and parched and bleeding lips, and nostrils cut through and eaten by the sharp alkaline air, mentally depressed and physically worn out, but cheered on and braced up by the light and joyous manner of the ever-hopeful James Trilobite Eton of Concord.

James Trilobite Eton of Concord never moaned, never giggered back, or shed a hot remorseful tear in the powdery, hungry waste of gray, parched ruin. No regret came forth from his lips in the midst of this mighty cemetery, this ghastly potter's field for all that nature had ever reared that was too poor to bear its own funeral expenses.

Now and then a lean, solid gray coyote, without sufficient moral courage to look a dead mule in the hind foot, slipped across the horizon like a dirty phantom and faded into the hot and tremulous atmosphere.

Four days we wallowed through the unchanging desolation. Four nights we went through the motions of slumbering on the arid bosom of the wasted earth.

SNEEZING CATARRH. The distressing sneeze, sneeze, sneeze, the acid, watery discharges from the eyes and nose, the painful inflammation extending to the throat, the swell of the mucous lining, causing choking sensations, cough, ringing noise in the head and splitting headaches—how familiar these symptoms are to thousands who suffer periodically from colds, coughs, and influenza, and who live in ignorance of the fact that a single application of Sanford's Radical Cure for Catarrh will afford instantaneous relief.

I MUST GIVE UP. I cannot bear this any longer. I ache all over, and nothing I try does me any good. My back aches, my joints are sore, my head is dizzy, and I feel as if I were going to be sick.

Geo. W. Tompkins, M.D., Cumberland Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes June 9, 1887: "I take pleasure in recommending Alcock's Pottery Plasters in all cases of general debility, especially where the pains are severe over the regions of the liver and chest, marked improvement occurs soon as relief from suffering is obtained. For lumbago these plasters surpass liniments, etc."
