Somewhat Unconventional.

"One of the most highly novel marriage ceremonies which I ever performed when I was a parson," said a well-known Denverite the other day, "was that in which a wealthy Dutchman and his buxom bride were the participants. I performed the ceremony in the middle of the country road on one of the coldest days that ever blew in the good old State of Pennsylvania. Queer place for a wedding, wasn't it? Queer place for a bride, and queerer, too, that her attire consisted of nothing but her underclothes and a buffalo robe. The regulation society reporter of the present day wouldn't have had much to do at that wedding. The most vivid imagination couldn't have portrayed the bride in white silk and orange flowers, and it couldn't even have been said of the bridegroom that he wore the conventional black. There wern't any refreshments served, and I have already told you enough about the bride so that you may well imagine there were no the little scene which was then impress ed so vividly upon my mind.

ne I was a young parson in the first flush of early experience and en-thusiastic to a degree which you will ap-preciate presently when I tell you how recklessly I performed that marriage cer-emony. Thad a way of dashing into such onies when asked to perform them, no matter who was opposed to it, or what stood in the way. It was one of my ec-centricities. I used to have a theory in my young days to the effect that whoever wanted to get married should not be debarred the privilege. I am not quite so firm on that point now as I was twenty years ago, but that is neither here nor there. Experience has taught me a great deal more about life than I knew then:
but if I had been more experienced at that time those two loving souls might never have beaten as one, and you, my dear fellow, might, otherwise never have listened to this little tale which I see you are preparing to swallow so greedily. I regret to say that that rash marriage ceremony, performed on the very impulse. Experience has taught me a great ore about life than I knew then; tion for remorse on my part.

"It was a bright morning in January, one of those cold, clear-cut days when the world, particularly in the country, seems like a huge, sparkling crystal. The sun shone brightly and the earth sparkled as if it were covered with diamonds. All the trees and lences were covered with Pow, some of which hung in the most fanciful forms. The roofs of the long, low farm-houses looked as if they were thatched with crystals; the great hay-ricks stood out upon the face of the land-scape like miniature pyramids turned white. Here and there the natural color of the evergreen broke through a white rift, the effect being rich and beautiful. In the eaves of the old red barns along whom I dwelt.

This is the way things looked and sounded to me that bright, clear winter morning as I dashed along in my smart little sleigh muffled in firs to the chin, forwarded a bill for his work. and skimmed along the country road, ra-diant in the possession of youth and health, and that exhibaration which co.d weather always brings to the young and hopeful. "I had just turned out of a long lane, and now came in sight of a small frame Dutchman as phlegmatic as any Holland-er; broad and stout, red-faced and round; petticoat, and a bright red flannel underwaist, in the very act of jumping into the deep snow which lay in the door yard beneath the windows. The buxom girl lighted in the deep, soft snow entirely unburt, and in another instant a young man, who sat in a bright red sleigh just outside cannot see the slightest resemblance to the form of the protested in vigorous language against the use of his wife's picture for any such purpose.

"You have rejected my work," said the artist; "you have told me that you cannot see the slightest resemblance to her features on that sleigh and under his buffalo robe with one adroit motion, as clever as anything I ever saw in my life. I had known Mina Schmitt and her lover, Dan Yokum, ever since they were children. I had long known of the stubborn old Dutchman's (Schmitt's) refusat to allow them to marry, and I now saw clearly that the hour had come. Dun and Mina had taken things into their own hands. They had reselved to send it to New York, where it will be used as an advertisement for a new brand of cigars."

Mr. Vilas saw that the artist had him, and the only alternative was to give him a check and send the portrait home, which he wisely did.—[Washington Letter St. Louis tilobe-Democrat.

Pennsylvania in those days, so nothing was lacking to complete the arrangements. In our own hands we held the elements of matrimony—a lover, a loveress, as the children say, and a parson. I sat quite still in my sleigh, well knowing that my services would soon be wanted, and presently up drove Dan, his face flushed and his eyes flashing with excitement, while pretty little Mina, muffled as she was, clung terrified and half crying to his arm.

"Marry us, parson, and be quick about it if you want to earn a ten-dollar gold piece," cried the excited Dutchman, 'her piece," cried the excited Dutchman, 'her father's hot behind.'

And indeed old Schmitt, like Lord Ullin, even now loomed up in the immediate distance, plowing through the snow like a little steam tug.

"The fact of old Schmitt's being on foot

"Don't you dare to marry them, parson, d—n you!" shouted the old fellow, wildly, glaring at the young people much like a wild beast would have done.

"I never will, Mr. Schmitt," I replied

"I never will, Mr. Schmitt," I replied quietly, "for they are married already."

"Then followed such a volley of oaths as you would not care to record, the upshot of it all being that Dan Yokum finally picked up his heavy whip and threatened to thrash Schmitt if he didn't desist. The doughty Dutchman then retired far enough behind the sleigh to elude the blows of the whip, and gave his daughter such a cursing as would turn the clear atmosphere of Colorado a ghastly blue if it were to be reproduced. It was with difficulty that I succeeded in keeping young Yokum from jumping upon the young Yokum from jumping upon the neck of his newly-acquired paternal rela-tive, but the feat was presently accom-plished and the old man turned back in the snow to his lonely home, for Mina was the one child of his old age, while Dan and I drove on slowly and talked it all over as we rode along the road side by

"If we had been older men that day. I think our hearts might have been a little touched as we saw the childless old decorations. In fact, had society reporters flourished in that remote region of Pennsylvania in that rather distant period, I think they might have 'soldiered' splant's "Lear," but we were young and all day long, notwithstanding the fact all day long, notwithstanding the fact hat-hezded, and looked at the question that one of the most highly novel wed-dings of the season was going on right there in the middle of the road "More than twenty years have passed that Dan and Mina had long since assured nee that day, but I shall never forget old Schmitt that when Mina was twentyone years old they would marry whether he would or no. And so from the date of her birthday the old man, ever on the alert, had locked the girl into her room up-stairs, and had taken all her clothes away from her except the linsey-woolsey petticoat, and the red flannel undergarment in which the blushing bride now appeared. But Dan and Mina were too smart for the old man. They were waking while he slept. They were inspired by love, and he by hate, and love came off conqueror.

"They laid their plans well, and succeeded as I have told you. You see, there was a sort of Montague-Capulet row existing between the Schmitts and the Values and there had been for years. emony, performed on the very impulse at being disinherited, that she and Dan of the moment, separated a father and led as happy a married life as has ever daughter for life, but as the marriage come under my observation. The last turned out happily in all other respects, I do not know as there is any particular by rosy, pretty children. Dan had grown richer, and the spacious farm-house they lived in sheltered one of the happiest home circles I have ever seen."-[Denver Tribune.

VILAS PAID FOR IT.

The postmaster general has just come off second best in encounter with a portrait painter in this city. Last summer he gave him an order to do Mrs. Vilas in water colors, and she sat the usual number of times. When she came back this fall the artist sent word that the picture was done, and Mrs. Vilas asked a num-ber of her friends down to the studio to the road wee brown snow birds twittered inspect it. They were all delighted with it, both as a likeness and as a work of art. Among others who called were Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Lamont, both of disagreeable.—(Boston Globe. Cleveland and Mrs. Lamont, both of whom promised to give the artist sittings.

the postmaster-general was not satisfied with the work and declined to pay for it. The artist called at the house for an explanation, and Mr. Vilas told him that there was not the slightest resemblance dwelling where lived a well-to-do Penn-sylvania Dutchman of the name of care to keep it for that reason. The inhmitt. Schmitt was a positive old dignant painter returned to his studio wondering what he could do with the rejected work, and found awaiting him a man of intensely Dutch proclivities and there an order from a firm of tobacco more given to practical notions of hogmore given to practical notions of hog-raising than to the dreamy visions of love, mark for a new brand of cigars, to inquaint, low windows in the upper story, but the plump form of Mina, Schmitt's he had painted, he would not, of course, daughter, attired only in a linsey-woolsey object to its use on a cigar-box. BILL NYE'S BUDGET.

WILLIAM AS A BOY.

If I were a boy again, endowed with the same wild passion for plucking waterm lons in the dark of the moon, I would no doubt fall a victim to that overmastering passion as I did before; but looking at it as I do now, I would be wiser. Roys cannot, however, have the mature judgment of manhood without the experience and the rheumatism that go with it. So it is better that in our childhood we may be able to eat a raw turnip with safety, and know something later on in life.

I notice a great change in myself while comparing my personal condition with that of joyous boyhood. Then I had no sense, but I had a good digestion; now I

The hurrying years have cavorted over my sunny head till I have worn itsmooth, was Mrs. Yokum just about two minutes before her irate Dutch father steamed alongside of our sleighs, red and hot as a to learn. I am still engaged in learning during the day and putting arnica on my experience at night.

Childhood is said to be the most glad period in our lives, and in some respects this statement may be regarded as felia-ble. But it is not all joy. I have had just as much fun in later years as I did in boyhood, though the people with whom I have been thrown in contact claim that their experience has been different. I hope they do not mean anything personal by that.

I do sometimes wish that I could be a boy again, but I smother that wish on ac count of my parents. What they need most is rest and change of scene. They still enjoy children, but they would like a chance to select the children with whom they associate.

My parents were blest with five brighteyed and beautiful little boys. Three of them grew up, and by that means became adults. I am in that condition myself. I was the eldest of the family, with the exception of my parents. I am still that way. My life was rather tempestuous in places, occasionally flecked with sunshine, but more frequently with retri-bution. I was not a very good roadster when young, and so retribution was most always just in the act of overtaking me. While outraged justice was getting in its work on me, the other boys escaped through a small aperture in the fence.

That is another reason why I do not yearn to be a boy again.

When we ran away from school to catch chubs, and when we built a fire to cook them, and the fire got into the tall, dry grass and burned four miles of fence and sixteen tons of hay for a gentleman for whom I had a high regard, and I went back to put out the fire, the other boys escaped and have remained so ever since.

A just retribution has never had any difficulty in overtaking me and walking up and down over my wishbone.

When a party of us had been engaged in gathering Easter eggs in the barn of a gentleman who was away from home, and he returned just as we had filled our pockets with the choicest vintage of his un-kissed hens, the other boys escaped sun-kissed hens, the other boys escaped while I was occupying the attention of the dog, and I had to slide out of the second story of the barn. It is still fresh in my mind as I write. I wore my father's vest at that time, and it was larger than necessary. My father was larger than I at that time, for I was only nine years of age and had not arrived at my full stature. In sliding down the batten I discovered that the upper end of it was loose and that my flowing yest had loose and that my flowing vest had slipped over it, so that when I got down about four feet I hung with the board buttoned inside my bosom and the scrambled eggs oozing out of my knickerbock-

The batten had sprung back agains the barn in such a way as to prevent my unbuttoning my vest, and while I hung there on the side of the barn like a coonskin, the proprietor came around and ac cused me of prematurely gathering his

I had heard truth very highly spoken of by people who had dabbled in it more or less, and so I resolved to try it in this instance. So I admitted that such was the case, and it was the best thing could have done, for the man said as I had been so frank with him he would take me down as soon as he got his other work done, and he was as good as his word. After he had milkel nine cows and fed nine calves be came around with a ladder and took me down. He also spanked me and set the dog on me, but I did not mind that, for I was accustomed

THE TRUTH ABOUT ITALICS.

The Globe-Democrat of St. Louis has been crowded with column after column To his surprise the portrait was return-ed to his studio, with the message that of a controversy. In answer to a writer who complained that his italies were disregarded, it informs him that his com-munications was cut into ferty parts, or "takes," for as many typesotters, while there were only three italic cases, and to suppress the natural, if not justifiable, profamity arising from the situation, the order was given to "disregard italics." In its protest that it takes occasion to make against the flatht which writers have to try to give strength to a weak style by profuse use of italics, the Globe-Democrat is entitled to the support make against the habit which many as you will presently see. Well, as I clude the portrait of a pretty woman. He clude the portrait of a pretty woman and the clude the portrait of a pretty woman. He clude the portrait of a pretty woman and the clude the portrait of a pretty woman. THE FOUNTAIN OF VITALITY.

The source of physical energy and mental activity, is the blood. Let this become vitiated with bile, or thin and watery in consequence food, and an interruption of the functions of the body, and a loss of stamina, flesh and appetite ensues. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a tonic specially adapted to restore all three, be-cause it assists digestion and assimilation, and cause it assists digestion and assimilation, and removes bile and other impurities from the circulation. Protected and strengthened with this admirable defensive invigorant, the system defice influences influences influences in the health, to which, if unregulated and feeble, it would undoubtedly succumb. Constipation, often an obstinate and chronic allment, is entirely removed by it, the liver, kidneys and bladder roused from inaction, and a tendency to rheumatism effectually counteracted. It also craditates malarial disease.
