THE OREGON STATESMAN, FRIDAY, APRIL 8, 1887.

Base Ingratitude.

The first two weeks of September are undoubtedly the finest of all the summer for ocean-bathing. The water has at length become bearably warm, and the waves though running high, run regularly and with a certain evenness that a fair swimmer can comprehend and count upon. At the resorts along the New Jersey coast, for instance, this is a season of absolute water revelry.

It was not long since, at one of these resorts, a heavenly morning-the sky a sheer dazzle of sun and palest azure ; the the sea booming grandly on the white sand, and all the merry thousands hastening down to meet it.

Two men and a woman left the fourth of their party, an elderly lady who was not in bathing costume, as were they, safely ensconced with camp-stool and umand tripped lightly down to the first thin ebb of wave. edge of the water. Having entered the water, they naturally separated. The young man was of the slender, willowy, type; a blonde with golden tints of hair and beard. Moreover every word and gesture seemed expressive of intense selfsatisfaction and self-gratification, possibly relative to some late personal triumph.

"Come!" he cried, reaching out joyously to the girl. But she drew back ; she could not swim. "No?" he said carelessly, and plunged off leaving her there near the other man. This other was also fair of complexion, but his closeshaven hair had the look of brown velvet and his large violet eyes were fringed with lashes almost black.

He had stooped to put some water on the young lady stood alone, her gaze resting quietly upon him.

"Shall I take you out a little farther?" he asked. She shook her head, with a fretful curve of the lip. "You look too sober," she said. "You might want to drown me."

He took no notice of the closing petulance

You think I should not look sober. then ?" "I'm sure I think nothing whatever,

Mr. Denton. You have relieved me of the necessity."

He took a step nearer to her. His face flushed. There, in the edge of the ocean, was an absurd place to show feeling. But he seemed to forget their surroundings, and to see only her dark, uncom-mon beauty, her flashing, conquering eyes. "Elma," he said, quietly, "I have done nothing to merit your enmity; I have been sincere "O, yes; but too much sincerity bores one at times.' The young man started, his lips moved, then he seemed to recall some a dull, ominous gleam. resolution, and no sound issued from his tightly-set jaws.

The girl continued to speak, however, in the same studiously insolent tone. "Why are we standing here? At least At least you might take me over to the line. certainly shall have lessons when we go back to town. It is absurd for one to feel so dependent. And these good swimmers are always so selfish."

He put out his hand. "Come this way," he said, simply.

they made of the thousands of couples who had gone down or were going down together. Some of the lookers-on upon the beach singled them out and discussed them : "The young lady in white and scarlet? With the Italian face? The tall young escort in blue and yellow? Miss War-riner-Elma Warriner. Quite rich. "Are you sure," he inquired, "are you Hush! The mother is there with the red umbrella. The young man is Ned ing your engagement to Fielding?" Denton; sort of third cousin; used to be engaged to her, but I hear it is off now;

"Mother," she cried in a voice that grated with its own agony; "Mother, will they both be lost?" And now another maddening cheer. The life-savers going out, and strong ropes gradually uncoiling. "God!" prayed Elma Warriner on her knees, there at her mother's side ; "God, if only their strength may last !"

Would the life-saver never reach them? Every second was indescribable torture! Yet the men had responded promptly. It had been hardly five minutes since the first alarm. "Mother, can you-can you see the blue and yellow? Oh, God save him for his bravery !"

Then she shut her ears with her fingers; the men were drawing in the ropes; the rythmic, awful chant of the voices measuring the length of pull, and brella, where the sand was quite dry, telling when to ease and let out with the

She held her fingers in her ears. The chant of the toiling men would have crazed her.

And amid loud shrieks and hoarses clamor the savers staggered ashore at last, and laid two forms upon the sand. Life was in both as yet. But Harry Fielding needed much rolling and skilful manipulating to bring him around. Denton, on the other hand, revived speedily and tried to stand alone upon his feet. His face was as ghastly as the other's and had the same blue circles around the mouth and eyes.

"I am all right," he murmured freely then his half-open eyes fell upon Eima Warriner. She had turned from Field ing's side.

"You saved him !" she cried, with an hysterical sob. Perhaps her voice grated again as a little while before.

The throng took up her words with a He had stooped to put some water on his head, and looking up he saw that ried to his hotel, but the rescuer was yet among them.

"Give me your hand," one man cried and then another, and "God bless you !" and the women sobbed aloud.

Elma Warriner sank dizzily into her mother's embrace, and heard rather than saw Ned Denton borne home upon men's shoulders-a hero.

Of the three, Miss Warriner perhaps felt the shock longer than the two who had been so near their deaths that morning. For several days she remained almost wholly in her chamber. Fielding and Denton went about as if nothing had happened. Fielding, who was quite wealthy, showed the other some extra little attentions, it may be, but neither of them alluded in any way to the late almost tragic occurrence. Elma Warriner, on the other hand, ould hot refrain from talking of it.

Fielding must have been ill-natured en some other score when one night he responded impatiently to a remark of hers concerning Ned Denton. His answer was almost sneering. "You make a perfect god of him for what he did!" Elma gazed straight in his face for a mo ment. She was silent, but her eyes had

"If he had been lost," she said, very slowly and coldly, "I should never have forgiven myself.

"Perhaps," said Fielding coldly, "I should never have forgiven myself." "Perhaps," said Fielding, angrily, "perhaps I am to take that as an indication of a change in your feelings to-ward me. Perhaps I am to understand you would like to end the engagement."

They had been sitting together in her mother's cottage parlor. She arose at , and, ere leaving the room, said: "You may take it so, if you choose. I adore bravery, and I loathe ingratitude !" In this way she freed herself. That evening Denton came to her. They sat for a time in the porch of her

We have seen and are seeing all this take place before our eyes, and know that other changes are taking place equally as prominent, and we wonder as we behold them. Ten years ago the in-surance companies only required an analysis of the fluids when they were taking insurance for very large amounts. To-day no first-class company will insure any amount unless they have a rigid unalysis of the fluids passed, and if any traces of certain disorders are apparent. the application is rejected. In their reports they show that the death of sixty of every 100 people in this country, is due either directly or indirectly to such disorders. The Brompton Hospital for Consumptives, London, England, reports that sixty of every 100 victims of consumption also have serious disorders of the kidneys.

Among scientists for the treatment of this dread malady the question is being discussed : "Is not this disorder the real cause of consumption !"

Ten years ago the microscope was something seldom found in a physician's office; now every physician of standing has one and seldom visits his patients without calling for a sample of fluids for examination.

Why is all this? Is it possible that we of the present generation are to die of diseases caused by kidney disorders? or shall we master the cause by Warner's safe cure, the only recognized specific and thus remove the effects? It is establiebed beyond a doubt that a very large percentage of deaths in this country are traceable to diseased kidneys. For years the proprietors of Warner's safe cure have been insisting that there is no sound health when the kidneys are diseased, and they enthusiastically press their specific for this terrible disorder We are conupon public attention. tinually hearing its praises sounded.

This means wonders !

Cannot the proprietors of this great remedy, who have been warning us of the danger, tell us how to avoid a disease that at first is so unimportant, and is so fatal in its termination? Are we to hope against hope, and wait without our reward?

The most significant of all changes however, that we of to-day can note is this radical change of view to which the public has been educated : It was formerly thought that the kidneys were of very small importance; to-day, we lieve, it is generally admitted that there can be no such thing as sound health in any organ if they are in the least degree deranged.

A STORMY AFTERNOON.

There is a gruff old senator in Washington whose tender thoughtfulness would seem to be in an inverse ratio to the strength of his language. He had a son who died. The day of the funeral was a very stormy one and he went, very deeply affected, to the grave. When he re-turned he walked into the room where some sorrowing friends were sitting mourning the organization. He shook his wet coat and hat and broke in on the silence with some abruptness: "This is a ---- of an afternoon to bury a son in."

TRIED

CRUCIBLE.

About twenty years ago I discovered a little sore on my cheek, and the doctors pronounced it cancer. I have tried a number of physicians but without receiving any permanent benefit.

Among the number were one or two specialists.

The medicine they applied was like fire to the sore, causing intense pain. I saw a statement in the papers tolling what S. S. S. had done for others similarly afflicted. I procured some at once. Before I had used the second bottle the neighbors could notice that my cancer was bealing up. My general health had been bad
