Gretta Thorne's uncle had died, and left her $70,000, and, regarding the lessons she had learned in the past with a sort of bitter hatred, Gretta plunged into magnificence with a feeling of despair.

But at church the truthful eyes of Mr. Clayton, the young pastor, seemed to haunt her with their reproachful glances, and she tried not to see him or notice his look, but it followed her home, and all little cemetery in the great Tar Heel the week she could think of little else. state, they lie together awaiting the day when the sea shall give up its dead, and Every Sabbath it was much the same, and once when Lizzie Grey very kindly be seen looking over the odds and ends begged leave to introduce Mr. Clayton, of some old battlefield, or the back yard Gretta lifted her brows in a haughty stare of some medical college for his other and said

"No, thank you; I am lectured enough already."

She knew that he had heard every word of their conversation, and furthermore that Lizzie's attack was premeditated. She gave the young lady an angry, indignant look, and swept out of church

The summer days merged into autumn, and Gretta had never yet spoken to Mr. Clayton. She avoided him studiously, although she often met him in the abodes of sickness and poverty.

It was at Mrs. Lawton's, a poor widow, that they met one Saturday afternoon, and Gretta rising quietly, laid down the book that she had been reading and left the house. Her cheeks burned with a sense of shame, and she could hardly choke the tears back. She would have given all her earthly possessions and gone back to the old days of servitude and shabby attire could it have raised her in the estimation of her pastor. She clasped her hands and leaned over the railing of the little wooden bridge, with a desolate pain at her heart. quick, firm step sounded upon the bridge, and, turning, the girl stood face to face with John Clayton, who put out his hands quietly, and, taking hers in his strong clasp, said:

"Gretta Thorne, will you tell me why you hate me?" 'Oh, Mr. Clayton, will you forgive me for my rudeness? I am so sorry." And Gretta lifted her beautiful, flushed, tearstained face, with a pleading look. "Fergive you! Yes, child, if you will tell me why you dislike me so."

"I don't hate you; indeed, I don't But I am so wicked, or every body calls me so; and I know you think so, because I like to dress and make a display. But I have been so poor, Mr. Clayton, and nobody noticed me; and Aunt Thorne wouldn't let me go to church, and I thought all that people went for was to show their clothes.

She had told the whole story in a few rapid words, and John Clayton understood her just as well as you and I do He said :

"You thought so, but you do not think so now, do you? That is not what you go for"—and he clasped the hands a lit-tle closer that Gretta was trying to draw away.

"No"; and a painful blush suffused Gretta's face, as she thought what she did go for, and wondered what Mr. Clay-ton would think of her if he knew.

A passionate wish rose up in the pas tor's heart to call the wayward girl his own; but he thought of Gretta's $70,000, and he dropped her hands as though en coals of fire. Hitherto he had only thought to win her regard; now was more miserable than when she had so coldly shunned him.

Gretta noticed the change, but her pride forbade further questioning, and w walked to the village, side by side, without a word.

A handsome carriage and spirited span bays stood at the gate before Mrs. Thorne's door. Gretta looked up shyly, with a woman's dread in her eyes, and "Will you go in, Mr. Clayton? I am sure Aunt Thorne will be glad to see And John Clayton, unable to resist, followed her into the house.

A handsome, stylish young man rose up to meet Gretta as she came in, and extending his hand, said familiarly;

"I am happy to meet you again, Gretta, and have come this afternoon to take you to town for that promised ride." "Thank you, I will be ready shortly,"

Gretta said, introducing the gentlemen and wondering why Grant Carrol couldn't have stayed away on that particular And John Clayton, with a jealous pang that he had never felt before, watched the two ride off, and listened to Mrs Thorne's recital of Gretta's plans for the CLOSELY UNITED.

Living in North Carolina, as I have all the past winter, my memory frequently brings back two prominent men of this state who have passed away, but whose history was remarkable in many ways.

These men, though thrown together almost constantly throughout a long pub-lic life, differed materially on many points. They lived in each other's society for years, and now in death they are still united.

Under one monument in the quie when the gentleman with the cork leg wil

For more than half a century these men ate at the same table and slept on the same couch, and yet they agreed in nothing. They were bound together by a tie which death alone could dissolve. These men, like most Siamese people And, turning, Gretta saw the object of had their origin in Siam, a foreign coun-

Asia As Siamese alone, or simply as twins, they would have attracted little attention and even by combining the two and be coming Siamese twins they would have died poor, perhaps, but with a connect-ing link which united the two at the base of the breast bone, they succeeded in acquiring a large fortune.

They have proved beyond a doubt, I think, that genius cannot be acquired. It is a gift. It comes not with the seeking. Had little Changie and Engie gone to school regularly all through their earlier years and studied with all their might it could not have fitted them for the life they afterward led, or caused them to at tract the attention of the whole world. Nature does not fit every man to be Siamese twin. Science cannot aid him in becoming one in after years. Close study and application cannot assist him. To be a successful twin involves promptness also. It is a matter that cannot be postponed. And to be a success ful Siamese twin involves even greater difficulties. Chang and Eng were raised up to mee a certain demand. The crisis came, and they were there to meet it. They came at a time when the world was clamoring for a pair of buff twins united at the sternum by means of a light yellow, first-But Chang and Eng were not happy, even with their great wealth and the fame they had acquired working an entirely new vein.

Nature, which united them so closely had not given them the same ideas and thoughts. They agreed on nothing, it is

One was a Knight of Pythias, while the other was a Royal Arch Mason, and the meetings were on the same evenings. People who knew them said it was painful to see the stronger of the two pull the other twin away to a Knight of Pythias meeting in which he felt no interest, or snake him to a revival when he wanted to go to a colored ball. A neighbor tells me that while Chang was a Baptist, and believed in immersion Eng was a doubter, but had to go in with his brother and be immersed through a hole in the ice.

One wanted to secede at the breaking out of the war, while the other wanted to save the country intact and fight under the starry banner free.

Those who will read the history of this strange brace of coffee-colored gentlemen, will agree with me that even though you strike the popular feeling and secure the public approval as a freak of nature, it is Chang and Eng. though bound together through life, could not make their wives live together in the same house even, and so they were compelled to maintain separate establishments, and go from e to the other trying to allay discord One of the twins was a good man, while it is said that the other was a very successful sinner. In case of resurrection it is not yet fully settled how it will be arranged, and the question has frequently been raised since their death whether they will or will not jointly visit alter-nately the realms of the blessed and the snorting, squealing precincts of the  $-\mathbf{d}$

I presume there are men who have pried into the future and know how this is, but I am free to confess that I am densely ignorant in regard to it.

However it may be, one thing is estab lished, and that is that the mantle of the Siamese twins has never fallen upon those who could successfully take their places for so long a period of time and keep out competitors as they did.

And yet there are people who claim that this is the era of progress.—Bill Nye in Boston Globe.

REV. BUCHU BROWN.

Bill Nye recently attended a colored church in North Carolina and in the course of his letter concerning it to the Chicago news says:

Another hymn was then sung by the entire congregation, and, as it was familiar, I joined in it with my rich falsetto voice. It had been years since music had called forth in me an answering melody, and many months had passed since my bird-like voice had floated out upon the quiet air in song.

After the hymn was over the pastor rose and said that while he was glad to have outsiders drop in at the services of the Mount Pisgah Fire-Proof Baptist church at any time, he would see that the next man who tried to break up the meeting was put out, if he had to do it himself

I did not join in singing the other hymns.

Colored people are passionately fond of music, but they do not care much for classical music. The Rev. Mr. Brown took a text, but I do not remember what it was. Neither did he. He spoke of various people referred to Bible, and his sermon was like the Mr. Ward's great panorama lecture-chiefly characterized by the large number of things in it that had nothing to do with it.

I remember that he referred incidentally to Pontius Pilate. "And what kine of a man was Paun-chus Pilate? "What kine of a man would you recken he was to look at? "Wus he tall and slim like a young saplin? 'Not much! He wus a big, broad man wid double chins onto him as fur as de eye could reach. 'Paunchus Pilate!

"Hum dat name over softly to yourselves, kine friends, and see ef you don't conclude that he was a wide man."

Later on he rebuked the youth of his congregation for various kinds of seemingly harmless sports, and rebuked the parents for permitting them. Among others he swept across the play ground with the besom of his wrath and attacked the game of marbles.

He showed how marbles led to gambling, and gambling to razors, and razors to the "gallus."

'Moreover, bredren," he added in a ow, tremulous tone, "what do de scripters say?" "Do not de blessed word ob de Lord say ober and ober again: Marble not?

BOTHER.

One of the saddest facts in connection with the lives of the people of America is that they "don't want to bother." That is to say they don't want to spare time enough for any thing but money-making amusement. The house which nature has provided is neglected in order to save enough money to "put into a house" which has been built with hands. Sleep is neglected so that personal appearance may be made at some social gathering. Digestion is disturbed because there is no time to be spared so that the machinery of the hody may have a chance to perform its work. Bathing is neglected because, for a lack of a more forcible reason, such men and women have lived to old age without it. "Too much trouble to bother" when the body does not cry aloud for attention. When it does it is too late. The man whose teeth do not trouble him would look upon it as a prodigal waste of time to go to a dentist and have them cleaned. He has a brush and powder, and these suffice, he thinks, for all that is required. He doesn't know that the hard substance which forms around his teeth is tartar and that the teeth are in danger of permanent injury when it is permitted to remain. Because "it is too much trouble to bother, house of clay, which might be made to grow in beauty," accumulates the materials of decay .- [New York Herald of Health.
