It seems that two parties named Chas. Wright and Samuel Harris were arrested there, on a charge of selling liquor without a license, they having refused to pay the additional one hundred dollars license fee which the law required. They bypealed the case on the ground that the oill which passed the legislature had, in crossitution, contained subject matter of more than one nature, inasmuch as the law would, in effect, amend every municipal charter in the state, while the title of the bill contained no reference to such matters. The supreme court concurred in this opinion, and held the law unconstitutional. The court also called attention, while not giving a decision on the point, to the fact noted in a recent editorial contained in this paper, of the discrepancy in the record in the journal of the senate, and of the senate. This was among the many mistakes made by certain officers of the selled upon to decide upon this point, the senate. This was the most flagrant, and the supreme court sold that should they ever be called upon to decide upon this point, the senate. This leaves Oregon without a liquor regulation, but the legislature will probably repass one in a few days.	 tist Church, in Turner, Or., on Sunday evening, Jan. 9th, 1887, by Rev. W. T.
