A COMMERCIAL UNION.

The Toronto Mail Says Bayard Will Work for the New Idea.

TORONTO, Oct. 14.—The "Mail" says that Secretary Bayard intends to offer to effect a commercial union with Canada, as a basis for settlement of the fisheries imbroglio. ALBANY NEWS.

A Suit for Heavy Damages—Wanted to Kill Mr. McNabb.

ALBANY, Or., Oct. 13.—Suit was begun in the circuit court to-day by John Rodgers, whose wife was recently run over and killed by the Revere house bus in this city, against John Schmeer, owner of the team and employer of the driver, for $5,000 damages. A formidable array of legal talent has been retained on both sides.

John Crabb was arrested and brought to this city this evening, for threatening to kill A. H. McNabb, at Shedd's. His trial will occur in Justice Dorris's court to-morrow.

WILL STAND TRIAL.

McCord Arrives to Meet the Charges of Jury Bribery.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—James McCord, ex-superintendent of the Sutter street railroad, arrived here on the overland train to-day and will appear in Judge Sullivan's court this afternoon for trial on a charge of jury bribing.

IN THE SECOND DEGREE.

Dillon, Manciet's Slayer, is Found Guilty of Murder—New Trial Wanted.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Oct. 14.—The trial of Dillon for the murder of Charley Manciet was continued to-day. No witnesses were examined for the defense, and defendant's counsel did not permit him to testify in his own behalf. The case was given to the jury about 4 p. m., and it returned a verdict at 5 p. m. of murder in the second degree. The defendant's attorney gave notice that he would apply for a new trial, and was allowed until Monday by the court to file a motion for such.

A FOOLISH CRIMINAL.

A Man now in the Penitentiary Proves to be a Great Rascal.

PORTLAND, Or., Oct. 15.—This evening's Telegram publishes the following: "For some months past a man named Henry Morgan, with innumerable aliases, occupied one of the cages in the county jail here. He was sent to this city from Columbia county for safe keeping, where he had been indicted for housebreaking. Several days ago he was returned to Columbia county, and, pleading guilty, he was sent to the penitentiary for the term of six years.

On the surface, these facts may appear to be of a very ordinary nature, but this man is a peculiar one, and from his own testimony he is steeped very deep in crime. From the moment of his arrest he feigned to be deaf and dumb. For a long while during his detention here Jailer Wood had no reason to doubt that Morgan could neither speak nor hear.

About two months ago, Harry Hammond, the watch thief, who recently forfeited $200 cash bail, was placed in the cage adjoining Morgan's, and they would communicate with each other by means of writing on the margins of newspapers. Morgan at last grew quite confidential with Hammond, and one night, when the former supposed Jailer Wood was asleep, Hammond was surprised to hear his neighbor speak as distinctly as any one. Jailer Wood, though, was not asleep, and heard the two men converse with each other, without, however, being able to make out what the subject of their talk was. The following day when the jailer took the two men out of their cages for exercise, he had a private interview with Hammond, saying that he had heard Morgan speak the previous night, and by making him some promises Hammond agreed to keep the jailer informed as to what Morgan had to say for himself. During the day the latter continued his intercourse with Hammond as before, writing on the margin of newspapers, but in the dead hours of the night Morgan used his tongue very volubly.

The papers upon which Morgan wrote his communications were carefully put away by Hammond and whenever an opportunity presented itself they were handed to Jailer Wood. These communications were principally of a character denunciatory of the jailer, but some of them also told of various great crimes that Morgan had committed in other portions of the United States. He stated that several states had offered a reward for his capture for crimes ranging from murder to train robbery. Relative to the latter he gave Hammond all the fine points of the business and wanted him to join in the "profession" if they could only manage to break jail.

Morgan may have been very boastful in the narration of some of his exploits, but that he is a hardened criminal of vast experience, there is no doubt. He showed great fear of standing trial, believing that some phase of his past record might be brought to light, and consign him to the penitentiary for a greater term, if not to the gallows, for more serious crimes committed elsewhere.

Jailer Wood is in possession of letters from the east which prove Morgan to be a great criminal."

LONG DRAWN.

San Francisco Puts in a Bid for the Democratic Convention.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 15.—A draft has been prepared by a number of prominent local democratic politicians, to be presented to the national democratic committee, calling their attention to the many advantages to be derived from holding the next national convention in this city. It shows California is a close state, and the results in Nevada and Oregon are always in doubt, and that the assembling here of leading men of the party might throw the Pacific coast electoral vote for the democracy.

A PHENOMENAL VOICE.

The September number of the Cornhill Magazine contains a curiously weird little story entitled "A Phenomenal Voice," which tells how an Italian singer in possession of a voice of unexampled power suddenly burst upon the operatic world of Paris, and continued to astonish his admirers till one night he vanished without warning or explanation beyond the curt announcement that he had lost his voice. Years afterward the writer, having occasion to engage the services of a poor Italian professor, is supposed to discover in this broken-down person the great basso of other days, and to learn from him the true history of his sudden disappearance. The "phenomenal voice" was simply the result of a mechanical contrivance akin to the lost secret of the mask-makers of antiquity, but affixed to the palate of the singer. It was the device of a mysterious inventor who, being ignorant of music, was content to share the salary of the supposed great basso, while jealously insisting on his treasure being returned to his keeping every night. There is no need to relate the catastrophe by which on one fatal evening "the Signor" literally "lost his voice" and found his brilliant operatic career suddenly and irrevocably closed. The notion is well worthy of the imagination of the author of the "Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." But the oddest part of the matter is that there appears to be some prospect of this quaint fancy proving to be only sober truth. Signor A. Bach, an Edinburgh music teacher and author of various works on the human voice, claims to have invented an instrument called by him a "resonator," which fits into the palate, as described in the story, and is said marvelously to increase the power of the voice. It is very probable that the writer in the Cornhill never heard of Signor Bach or his invention. Though not yet made public, the resonator has, we believe, been examined by Professor Tyndall, who will probably have something to say about it.—[Galignani's Messenger.]
