

Camp Kodak Contest Is Announced Today

Amateur Photoists to Have Chance at Prizes

Camera enthusiasts now have the opportunity to gain national recognition for themselves and national distribution of their photographic work. A contest open to all officers and enlisted personnel of the United States army, an outstanding event in the field of photography, is being sponsored by the magazine Coronet. The contest, which opens August 24 and closes September 24, offers eighteen especially designed gold medals to the winners plus publication of the prize winning photos in the January issue of Coronet magazine.

Possible types of photographs are divided into three classes. Type A for vertical black and white studies. Sixteen of these will win medals and be reproduced. Type B for horizontal black and white studies for which one medal will be awarded and one picture reproduced and type C, vertical or horizontal color Kodachromes. One of these will be reproduced in the January issue of Coronet and one medal awarded. Entrants may submit as many pictures in any or all of the different classifications as they desire but any one man will be awarded only one medal.

Photographs submitted in the contest must all depict military subjects. Humor, human interest, action, character studies or any unusual subject will be considered providing it is of a military nature. The size of the prints will not affect the judging but certain sizes are preferable. For black-and-whites (either vertical or horizontal) 8"x10", glossy or otherwise are preferred. Kodachromes should be 7"x5" or larger but 35 mm. will be accepted. The name, rank, branch of service of the photographer and classification desired for the picture should be printed plainly on the back side of the picture. Preliminary judging for pictures entered from this post will be done by the Camp Adair Sentry editors but all photographs will be reviewed by the pictorial branch of the Bureau of Public Relations, War Department, Washington, D. C. Final decision will rest in the hands of Coronet editors and first reproduction rights are also reserved for Coronet.

These are the details covering Coronet's army camera contest men and Camp Adair personnel should place in the final judging. Don't waste any time getting in your picture, as many as you like. Address your prints to Coronet Army Camera Contest, c/o Camp Adair Sentry, Camp Adair.
