

"Man cannot live by bread alone."

This quotation is one of the most familiar in the whole world. All of us have heard it so many times that perhaps it has lost a little of its meaning for many of us.

It may well be that complete disregard for the spirit back of these few words caused the present world war. We know now that our enemies have done all they can to crush out of their fighting men those fine Christian ideals that must be our guide in the present conflict.

To really enjoy life, to get that measure of satisfaction out of our existence that is our due we must seek more than just bread. We must have more than the material things of life. Realizing this, those who direct our military activities have very wisely provided for the spiritual needs of our fighting forces.

This Sunday, at a simple but impressive service, Post Chapel Number One will be dedicated. It will symbolize the dedication of all 11 chapels which have been placed conveniently in various areas on the post. In these chapels services for men of all creeds, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, will be held regularly.

While the chapels symbolize the service offered to our men, the religious activities are by no means restricted to their walls. On this post will be about 30 chaplains, all of whom are ready and willing, night or day, to answer any call that any man may make.

No matter what your trouble, you may feel free to go to the chaplain at any time. Here you will find sympathy, consideration, and helpful, friendly advice. The chaplain will hold in confidence anything you may wish to tell him. He will be, first and last, your friend.

But do not limit your contacts with the chaplain to times when you are in need. You will find the chaplain is first of all a regular fellow. He wants to see you enjoy yourself while you are in the army, and is as much concerned over your happiness as he is with your sorrows. You will find in the chapel a place to meet other fellows who are seeking the finer things in life. You will have the opportunity of enjoying good singing, of taking part in discussions on many subjects.

The chaplain will appreciate cooperation from the soldiers, also. When things are going nicely with you, drop around to see the chaplain and volunteer to work with him. If you can sing, offer your services for the choir. If you've had experience in leading group discussions, you can help him organize meetings. There are many ways in which you can help these officers in their work.

The chaplain corps is a vital, dynamic part of our army, an army that is organized to crush, just as quickly and as efficiently as possible, those forces that want only to plunge the world into darkness and despair. It is up to all of us, striving constantly with all that is in us, to defeat these forces and bring light, freedom and happiness to the world again.

Local Library Has Varied Collection

Best of Service Is Available to Adair

The Public Library of New York City holds many thousands of books but Charles Woodbury, who used to have charge of the vast general reading room supply there, admits that the range of titles is no greater than in the few shelves of books that Camp Adair possesses. It couldn't be.

The titles in this incipient camp library, with Woodbury in charge, include William Axling's "Kagawa," in praise of the Japanese Christian social worker of that name; Margaret Sidney's "Five Little Peppers and How They Grew," "Port and Terminal Charges at U. S. Seaports"; "A Horseman's Book on Practical Breeding," and "Sewerage and Sewage Treatment."

No library in the world, unless it's another camp library, has a higher proportion of books that nobody would care to read. But don't go over the hill on that account. Soon Adair will have that army basic library of 5,000 books that every camp gets and also some 20,000 books now stored in nearby towns.

The camp will receive the Book of the Month Club book and already the library has several of those books: Forbes' "Paul Revere"; the works of Stephen Vincent Benet; "The Just and the Unjust" by James Gould Cozzens. Also the shelves hold some Dickens, Mark Twain, Hardy, Jack London, Zane Grey and collections of poetry and essays.

Today's small library is in building T-7-502, on First St., near Av. E. Tomorrow's will be divided between the two Service Clubs.

The library is open daily from 8 o'clock in the morning to 10 o'clock at night, except on Sundays, when it opens at 2 o'clock. A soldier may take out a book and keep it for a week.

CALISTHENICS — 1. A systematic method of breaking a soldier's back at 6 o'clock in the morning.
