

Vignettes of Army Life - A Good Night's Sleep

Evening shadows had fallen, Joe had polished his shoes... straightened out his newly-acquired foot-locker...

Bill was sitting Indian style on his bed, writing a letter and smoking, racing against time to finish before the "blackout."

Soon, the immediate after-dark chatter faded to mumbled and whispered tones and gradually ebbed with the first few minutes of sleep.

It had been a rather hard day. More drill, fatigue duty, and the cumulative listlessness that Friday night brings.

Lights were flicked on and amid yawns and stretches, reluctant forms dragged themselves out of bed, dressed rapidly in the cool morning air.

The interlude of refreshment had gone. Night noises faded into nothingness, and Joe looked square into the face of another day.

But Sid had apparently not been awakened by such a slight disturbance, for scarcely had Joe concentrated on sleep again when Sid opened up with a salvo of deep-throated and nasalized snoring.

By this time, comments on snoring and furnaces piped up from all directions... sleepily offered and sleepily received.

Searcely had silence come into its own once more when the irritating noise of the furnace's being fed crept through the building.

cookies and candy. Mob psychology brought similar hints and, thereupon, everyone was gnawed by the pangs of hunger and couldn't possibly pass the night without further nourishment.

Going back to sleep was quite easy, now that the fellows were in the mood. And Joe dozed off. He was oblivious of the symphony of snores being played around him.

Suddenly, like a bolt from the blue, the noise of a G.I. shoe plummeting to the floor above startled Joe. He hastily irritated, he closed his eyes again and prepared for its mate.

Thus with the witching hour at hand, complete silence (except for the chronic snorers) settled and Joe was able to sleep the rest of the night undisturbed.

Cooking With Gas By T/S Rolland C. Rogers Of Cooks and Bakers School

Major General G. R. Cook, commanding 104th Division, has detailed his mess officers to attend a specially organized Officers class at the School for Bakers and Cooks.

When asked about his future, Angelo says that if he can't get a booking after the war, he can always work for his uncle in Trenton, N.J., who sells gasoline and tires.

That uproar in the hospital area the other Saturday morning was not a one-man Jap blitzkrieg or a patient gone berserk but merely Sgt. Joseph Chpko of the Medics trying to get a good ticket to the Oregon State game for his sweetie pie.

MEDITATIONS of THE MEDICS

Ten years in show business, during which-time he has played with some of Broadway's biggest stars, is the record of Cpl. Angelo P. Calabrese.

Angelo got his start in the show world at the age of 16 when he toured the east and middle west for one year in a Gus Edwards vaudeville show.

In 1937 he spent one season in New York burlesque as a singer and straight man. The next stop was as M. C. at the Pepper Pot, a popular Greenwich Village night club.

Angelo says Oregon is truly "God's country," but hurriedly adds there's no place like New York city. He is now a hard-working medic, assigned to the medical supply office.

Angelo's idol in the entertainment world is Bing Crosby, and his favorite orchestra is Coleman Hawkins, whose recording of "Body and Soul" is tops with him.
