

Maj. Josiah Osborn Leaves for New Duty

Maj. Wm. Feldmiller to Head SCB Until Successor Arrives

Major Josiah J. Osborn, since August 24 the assistant commandant of the Camp Adair branch, Cooks' and Bakers' School, on Thanksgiving day departed on orders from the War Department, to new duties at the Command and General Staff School.

Major William H. Feldmiller, assistant director of training for School of Cooks and Bakers, Ninth Service Command, is here and has assumed charge until the arrival of Maj. Osborn's successor, a month or more hence. Major Feldmiller will then return to headquarters, at the Presidio, San Francisco.

(Editor's note: Just prior to his departure and while waiting orders directing him to his new duties, Maj. Osborn, whose army background is considerable, released the following interview to a Sentry reporter):

For several years Maj. Josiah J. Osborn has had a double-barreled reason to celebrate Armistice day. He was born November 11, 1896.

"The place," he said, "was on the side of Osborn Mountain, in Washington. For sake of geographic orientation, though, you'd better say it was adjacent to Mount Rainier."

Maj. Osborn's army career dates to February, 1915, when he joined the Canadian army, shipped overseas and arrived—you guessed it—on his birthday, November 11.

"Then it took me three more years to get that blanked war stopped."

On April 18, 1916, Pvt. Osborn got transferred to the American army, soon rating corporal, then sergeant. After the Armistice he returned to the United States in March, 1919, and then, as we're informed all good Seattle-ites do, attended Washington State college for two years.

But the military idea had him. In 1923 he joined up with the famed 15th Infantry and shipped to China for three years service. Returning he went, as a corporal, with the Seventh Infantry to Alaska service. There he was later discharged.

During 1929 and 1930 he "built roads for the Bureau of Public Roads, then returned to Seattle and opened a restaurant."

This went on until 1934, when he returned to active duty as a lieutenant, junior officer with the CCC. A year later he was given command of a camp, remaining until March 1, 1941. Then he went to active duty with the then Ninth Corps Area, School for Bakers and Cooks.

When you are singing your next Barracks Room Ballad on the subject of mess, peg these words of Maj. Osborn, who has been around enough to know:

"There's no doubt ours is the best-fed army in the world—and there's no job in the army with such direct bearing on health, welfare and morale. A good kitchen force can make or break a company."

Maj. Osborn had prefaced this by saying: "In the other war I had a chance to see how they fed the British, French and even the German armies. We occasionally had a chance to eat food the Germans had just prepared," said he with a twinkle.

(Although his home is in Seattle, while on duty here, Maj. Osborn resides with his wife in Corvallis.) His hobbies—hunting and fishing.

COLONEL HASN'T FOUND OUT
An extension telephone at the Ordnance Works buzzed. A certain colonel answered, "All right."

"Why in the Sam Hill haven't you sent the required records to this office this morning?" came the irritated voice of an enraged office clerk. "I swear I have a great mind to come over there and pin your ears down. What do you think you are, I'd like to know, holding the works up like this?"

"Hold on, young man," came a deep, clear voice. "Do you know to whom you speak?"

"No, and what's more I don't

FIRST SACRIFICE

By S. L. Gibson
Of course I'd bought some war bonds
And gathered metal scraps
And worn out rubber hose and tires
To help destroy the Japs;
And then I'd done some other things
Toward building ships and planes
For other men to fly the skies
And sail the ocean lanes;
But today I gave my son,
So young, so strong and fine,
He joined the U. S. Army ranks
To fight for me and mine.
I had not made a sacrifice
Until he said goodbye,
The war had been so far away
But now it seems so high.
I know that scrap is vital
To make a plane or gun,
But today I gave, in khaki clad,
My heart, my blood, my son.

Lt. Godfrey Tells Pix Men Censorship

M. I. Officer Is Guest Speaker at Club Meet

Military censorship with regard to the publishing of news photographs or regular photographs taken at Camp Adair was discussed in detail Monday night by Lt. George H. Godfrey, post public relations officer, when he spoke at the regular weekly meeting of the Camp Adair Camera Club held in the library left of Service Club 2.

Lt. Godfrey, who is assistant military intelligence officer, outlined the rules governing the taking of pictures on this army post, and illustrated each set rule with several examples. He pointed out that there are so many available subjects that it is never a problem to snap a good picture, yet a picture which would not be of any benefit to the enemy.

He encouraged the club members to take pictures which would be of news value, and which, if cleared by the Public Relations Officer, could be submitted for newspaper or magazine publication. Any picture intended for publication, he added, MUST be approved by the PRO, and to save time and trouble, he suggested that the person having an idea for a picture or layout first consult the PRO for approval "before you waste your film and paper."
