The Doctor's Ailemma
By Nessa Brinton

Chapter XXV

'Yess. I know, sir. The last time I was there, I saw a man and a woman sitting in the street, and the man was smoking a pipe. They seemed to be very much in love.'

'Yes, yes, I know. But what did you do then?'

'I went over and spoke to them. I told them I was a doctor, and asked them if they needed any help. The woman was very grateful, and said she would be glad to have any assistance. The man was less pleased, but he eventually agreed to come with me to the hospital.'

'That's good. Did you go?'

'I did go. I remember it well. It was a very cold, snowy day, and the streets were crowded with people. The man and woman were cold and hungry, and they seemed to be very sick. They were given warm food and shelter, and after a few days, they began to improve. The man eventually rescued his wife from her husband, and the two started a new life together.'

'That's wonderful. Did you hear anything more about them?'

'Yes, I did. They eventually married, and they lived happily ever after. They had many children, and they were all very healthy and happy. I was very glad to have been able to help them, and I know that they will always remember me kindly.'

'That's lovely. Thank you for telling me about it.'

'I'm glad you like it. It was a very satisfying experience, and I learned a lot from it. I think it's important to help others, no matter what their situation.'

'That's true. We should always try to help those in need.'

'That's what I believe. And it's good to know that there are people out there who are willing to help others.'

'That's true. It's always nice to see the good in people.'

'That's true. And it's good to know that there are always ways to help others.'

'That's true. And it's good to know that there are always ways to help others.'