Ice for Nausea.

NO NO NO NO NO NO

A physician advances the theory that the distressing sensation of nausea has its seat in the brain and not in the stomach, and that relief may be obtained by cooling the base of the brain. He claims to have tested this often and thoroughly in the case of sick headache, billous colic, cholera morbus, and other ills in which the nausea is a distressing symptom without a single failure! Also, that he once relieved the nausea resulting from cancer of the stomach by the application of ice to the back of the neck and occipital bone. The ice is to be broken and the bits placed between the folds of a towel. Relief may be obtained by holding the head over a sink. or tub, and pouring a small stream of water on the neck.
