Last of Outlaw Tracy.

SALEM, Aug. 9.—(Special).—The body of Harry Tracy was received in Salem today from Davenport Wash. It was this afternoon interred in the prison cemetery. The members of the Washington posse claim the entire reward of $1500 offered by this state, but no settlement was had, for the reason that the following telegram was received from Sheriff J. H. Gardner, of Lincoln County, Washington, at the Governor's office shortly after the arrival of the convict's body in this city: "Do not pay Tracy reward until other claims can be filed." Thus far no other claimants to the reward have made themselves known, nor have any claims been filed against the state. But for the receiving of the Gardner telegram, or other conflicting claim, it was the intention of the Oregon officers to settle with the members of the Washington posse on the basis of the reward. When the Gardner telegram was received Superintendent Lee informed the men to whom he had given a receipt for the body that further negotiations pertaining to the reward would, necessarily have to be deferred until it has been decided to whom the money shall be paid. He further said that he would prefer that the Washington contestants for the reward compromise upon a man to whom the Oregon officials might turn over the money, the agent to hold the same until the proper manner of its distribution might be determined. This plan would relieve this state of any participation in the controversy.

The final chapter in the remarkable career of the multi-murderer was recited in Salem today when the remains of the criminal were buried beside those of his associate-in-crime, David Merrill, in the prison burying ground. Tracy's body reached this city on the belated overland train at 11:20 o'clock this morning. It was accompanied to Salem by Col. C. A. Straub, Dr. E. C. Lanter and Attorney Maurice Smith, of Creston, Wash., from whom the body was received by Superintendent J. D. Lee, of the state penitentiary, after receiving the assurance that the casket contained the body of Harry Tracy. No sooner had the rough box containing the remains reached the platform at the depot than a score of half-crazed relic hunters in a wild scramble separated themselves from the large throng that surged about the baggage car and with knives began the mutilation of the box containing the remains, in order to get a mere splinter of wood that might serve as a souvenir. But for the prompt intervention of Superintendent Lee, who was on the ground, the box would surely have been hacked to pieces, and it was only by threatening the disturbers with arrest that the casket could be removed to the wagon without further molestation. Attended by Farmer John Porter, of the prison, who was placed in charge of the remains, and the others, the body was driven direct to the penitentiary. Arrived there, the box was carried into the turnkey's room where, for the first time since the body left Davenport, the cover to the casket was removed. The body was positively identified as that of Tracy by Superintendent Lee, Warden James Turnkey McCormick, and shop guards John Stapleton and Albert Steiner. The remains were viewed by about a score of persons outside of the prison officials and employees of the institution, in addition to a large number of the trusty prisoners, while many of those inside the walls were given the privilege of looking upon the remains. While there were probably 500 people at the depot station drawn thither by curiosity, but a very few presented themselves at the prison to take a last look. When the body had been identified and the remains had been viewed by those who cared to, the casket was closed and removed to the prison cemetery where it was interred beside the body of Merrill. No service of any kind attended the burial.

Before the interment, chemicals were introduced into the casket that will destroy the body. This will defeat the expected attempt to steal the body. In addition to this precaution Superintendent Lee says the grave will be closely watched and a warm reception will await the visit of any miscellaneous visitors.

Tracy was not the bad looking man that the circulars pictured him. While he had the prominent cheek bones, broad chin indicative of a rare determination, deep-set eyes and protruding forehead, credited him in the published pictures, still his features were not bad. Having been embalmed, the body was in a splendid state of preservation and it was not difficult to identify the remains.

The Washington men are desirous of retaining the famous rifle that was captured after the death of Tracy as a souvenir of their hunt, but at the urgent request of the Salem officials they surrendered the firearm, which it is proposed to have placed in the office of the Governor. The revolvers that were found on Tracy will go to the men who found the body.
