Speak on behalf of sea animals as OCA volunteer

NEWPORT — A massive audience, camera crews, exotic filming locations and a Hollywood smile — most people think that is the recipe for being an ambassador for nature.

At the Oregon Coast Aquarium, folks will find none of that necessary. Interpretive volunteers collectively connect with over 400,000 visitors each year.

Speaking on behalf of animals and their environments is no simple task, which is why the Oregon Coast Aquarium treats its volunteer recruits to a six-weekend crash course, which starts on April 4, on the coastal and marine fauna of Oregon.

Upon graduation, these volunteers spend a few hours each week speaking on behalf of Oregon's marine animals and their environments to aquarium visitors. This exposure provides people a tremendous opportunity to make a positive impact for their local environment, and the ocean on a global scale.

"When a volunteer connects with a visitor about a particular animal, or a conservation issue like marine debris, they make an impression that may last a lifetime," said Beth Hawkyard, Volunteer Services Manager for the Aquarium.

Additional perks for aquarium volunteers include:

- Complimentary Aquarium membership.
- Invitations to participate in exclusive lectures and continuing education programs.
- A behind-the-scenes look at a marine science exhibition facility that is consistently ranked among the 10 best in the U.S.
- Subscription to the monthly newsletter, The Upwelling.
- Discounts at the Wildlife

Trading Company gift shops in the aquarium.

• The opportunity to join rank with nearly 350 other outstanding volunteers that share a passion for marine science.

To learn how to become one of the newest voices of Oregon's marine and coastal environments, visit www.aquarium.org or contact the aquarium's Volunteer Services department at volunteer@aquarium.org.

publisher of Grays Sports Almanac, have the Cubs winning the World Series.

There are, of course, holes in the theory. For one, it implies that the flux capacitor, a Y-shaped set of three incandescent lamps set in a box that makes time travel possible, has been invented, and that Marty McFly has successfully harnessed the power of lightning, traveled both forward and backward in time and imparted this knowledge to us.

But at least we know that the robot vacuum kind of works. Even the hover board seems plausible, more plausible than a team stocked with confident rookies announcing their plans to win the National League Central.

Even their new manager, the astute Joe Maddon, has taken to calling the Cubs' spring training "Cub University."

They can be like Royals, they say. You know, young and optimistic. They can win it all if they want, history be damned.

"Hey, that's what we expect and that's what we believe," Cubs first basemen Anthony Rizzo told reporters this spring. "And that's what we're going to do," he adds.

And that's where the road ends. For the past five years, it's led to fifth place. Maybe this year, with guys like Jon Lester on the mound, a proper sense of history will take hold. Lester, born in the '80s and a party to the Red Sox exorcism, averages 16 wins per year, and that's usually how far out of first place the Cubs are.

Vegas has them at 14-1 odds.

Marty McFly's Cubs were listed as 100-1 longshots. Of course, they were said to have beaten Miami in a five-game sweep, something pretty much impossible to do today, but as they say, tomorrow never knows, and when you're at a Cubs game this summer, sitting back with an Old Style and a "sassage," you won't care where the road leads ... perdition be damned.

From Mesa to the Northside you don't need roads. The Cubs are eternal winners in the mind's eye.
