Help For People With Diabetes: Making Sense Of Blood Sugars

(NAPSA)-If you are among the estimated 29 million people with diabetes in the U.S., keeping your blood sugar in a healthy range is key to preventing or delaying long-term complications such as kidney, eye and heart disease. When used properly, regular blood sugar monitoring can help you and your healthcare professional detect high and low blood sugar and make therapy and lifestyle adjustments.

Unfortunately, many people with diabetes don't test their blood sugar as recommended by their healthcare professional because of psychological or emotional reasons.

In a study of more than 800 people with diabetes, three key reasons were given for disliking and avoiding testing blood sugar:

- It's a burden, it takes work;
- It's not viewed as worthwhile;
- It's often a demotivating experience when, despite their best efforts, their blood sugar levels are frequently out of range.

"Many people may feel overwhelmed by too much information, information that isn't clear, or simply by the day-to-day effort required to manage diabetes," explains Dr. William Polonsky, co-founder and

A new device can help people with diabetes better understand their blood sugar test results with no extra work and feel more confident about managing their blood sugar.

president of the Behavioral Diabetes Institute.

New Tools Can Help

Fortunately, there are new tools that can help. For example, the new OneTouch Verio(r) Blood Glucose Monitoring System can help people better understand their blood sugar test results with no extra work.

Easy to use, the meter features a color-coded range indicator that shows whether a result is within (Green), below (Blue) or above (Red) the customizable range limits set in the meter. When the meter displays a low result, it prompts the user to treat for the low glucose result and retest in 15 minutes.

"Knowing at a glance what your result means is important because another study has shown that nearly one third of people say they can't make sense of their results," says Dr. Polonsky. "The OneTouch Verio(r) Meter can help patients feel more confident about managing their blood sugar by providing feedback about their results and opportunities for better control."

The meter also looks for signs of progress and provides positive reinforcement through two types of progress notes. An "achievement" message is displayed when the current result is in range following three consecutive above range results. A "consistency" message appears when 70 percent of results in the past seven days are in range.

After using the meter for a week, 94 percent of people with diabetes said it made their test results simple to understand.

The system is available where diabetes supplies are sold with an estimated retail price of $19.99. For more information, visit www.OneTouch.com.

Easy Ways To Modernize Your 10-Year-Old Vehicle

(NAPSA)-New cars offer the latest in infotainment, safety and convenience but what if you aren't in the market for a new ride? Fortunately, there are many aftermarket products that can add value to a car you've already paid off, and are often more advanced than factory-installed features on the road today.

"The aftermarket offers an array of options for car and truck owners," said Chris Kersting, president and CEO of the Specialty Equipment Market Association (SEMA). The trade association represents the $33 billion automotive specialty equipment industry that includes thousands of products that are available to enhance a vehicle's styling, performance, comfort and convenience. "Install these items into your older vehicle and you'll have all the latest technologies to enhance your driving and your passengers' experience."

Bluetooth
Integrating wireless functionality from your phone and other devices is an easy way to add convenience and, most importantly, a safer hands-free experience to your daily drive.

The simplest and least expensive option is a stand-alone universal Bluetooth kit that works with any car stereo and comes with a small speaker and microphone. This option does not require any modifications but is limited to hands-free calling only.

Heads Up Display (HUD)
Aftermarket Heads Up Display (HUD)

You can enhance your vehicles in more ways than you may realize.

A New Receiver/Head Unit

The best option for adding Bluetooth calling and streaming is to purchase a new stereo with this technology built in. If music is your major motivation, you won't have to retire your old CDs, as there are plenty of units that still offer a disc player as well as a USB port to connect with your phone or with a portable drive for MP3/WMA playback, and an auxiliary input for universal connectivity.

Sound
Now that your trusty transportation has some new hands-free audio features, it's probably time to upgrade the sound quality in your ride. Go for speakers that fit in your car's pre-existing mounts, and subwoofer for a clear and dynamic audio experience. Make sure you match your new speakers to the correct speaker wire for peak performance.

Blind Spot Monitoring
Relatively new even in the latest vehicles, blind spot monitoring systems detect cars that may be out of your line of sight. The kit relies on two front and two rear sensors mounted to the bumper that work together to detect a vehicle in your blind spot, and an LED display inside your vehicle lights up on the appropriate side when one is detected. An audible alarm will then sound if you then signal and intend to change lanes.

Rearview Camera

Rearview cameras help drivers see what is behind them when the car is in reverse. A complete setup includes a camera mounted to the rear of the vehicle, a receiver, and a display mounted on the dashboard. Major manufacturers of aftermarket head units offer camera add-on packages to their receivers with in-dash display, and some GPS units offer the add-on as well, making the update inexpensive and easy to install.

Vehicle Tracking and Telematics

There are a few products that offer detailed information about your vehicle via real-time notifications from your smartphone, including driving habits, fuel, engine and battery monitoring, and engine trouble code translation. The device will even send mobile alerts when the car arrives at a certain location, travels beyond a preset GPS "fence" or exceeds a specified speed limit...ideal for anyone who wants to keep tabs on their 10-year-old car when others are behind the wheel.
