Sheriffs offer safety tips for crabbing, boat anchoring

While the fall months offer dures imperative. Strong tidal the best crabbing opportunities in local bays, crabbing is open year round.

It is important to understand where it is safe to place crab traps or anchor boats.

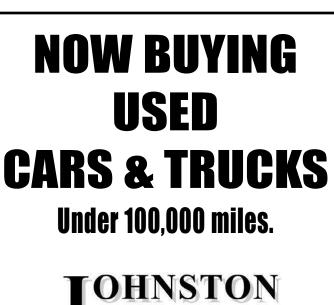

Listed below are suggestions and rules that apply to placement of crab traps and anchoring boats.

• Place crab traps or rings outside the navigational channel.

• Use appropriate rope/line for depth of water. A rope too long for the depth of water may float on top creating a navigational hazard. If your rope is too long for the depth of water, a small weight attached between the float and trap will help keep it under the surface.

• Add weight to the trap which will help prevent it from "walking" or moving with the strong tidal flows.

Each year, improper anchoring is the cause of injury and death. Swift currents, high flows and cold water make the following anchoring procecurrents change approximately every six hours.

• Use anchor line five to seven times the depth of the water.

• Bring the bow into the wind or current; place motorboat engines into neutral.

• Lower the anchor over the bow, do not toss or throw it overboard.

• Always secure the anchor line to the bow.

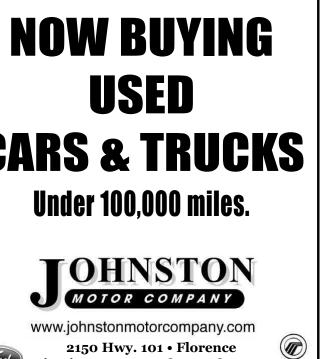

• Never anchor over the stern or sides of boats; this has caused many boats to capsize and sink.

• Make sure arms, legs, hands, and feet are completely clear of the line before lowering the anchor.

Do not obstruct a passageway ordinarily used by other boats, as prohibited by law.

For additional boating tips, call the Oregon State Marine Board and request a copy of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers "Anchor Safely" tip sheet or visit www.boatoregon.com.
