

Get Oregon geologic maps, reports online

PORTLAND — The Oregon Department of Geology and Mineral Industries (DOGAMI) has launched Publications Center, a web hub for free download of maps, reports, data, articles and more.

Everything DOGAMI has published since 1937 is now available, from early mining reports to imagery created with cutting-edge lidar technology to geodatabases.

Making the agency's science freely available to all helps Oregon communities learn more about the natural hazards, mineral resources and geology around the state.

Among the best sellers at Nature of the Northwest Information Center, which closed in July, were the "Oregon: A Geologic History" map, recreation maps of Oregon peaks, and stunning lidar images of Oregon scenes.

All are available for free download at Publications Center online at www.oregongeology.org/pubs.

Hey ya'll, the name's Fanny Mae. I am fun loving and looking to find a family to share my life with. I have a little hair loss Because I had a bad case of the fleas. I am now flea free and my hair is growing back. Sometimes I get a little goofy, I just need a little reminding that I have manners and need to use them.
