Nhance Wood Renewal

Our customers can be described this way: they are unhappy with the current look of their cabinets either due to them looking outdated or worn. They don't want to do a full remodel due to budget and/or disruption. They are shocked by the cost of replacing with quality cabinetry or re-facing with quality doors. They want their cabinets to look better, more contemporary, cleaner, and as like new as possible, and have some money left in the budget for other things.

Nhance Revolutionary Wood Renewal was born over 15 years ago, and has gradually expanded to become the largest, most successful wood renewal business in the country. The success of our process is due to the unique needs that we meet for our customers. The Nhance process is designed to refinish existing wood surfaces without traditional methods that are messy, disruptive, caustic and sometimes ineffective.

With Nhance Revolutionary Wood Renewal, the customer has the choice of either renewing their cabinets to get them to be "as new" as possible or the customer may choose to change the color entirely. The customer can choose to go darker wood-tone and maintain the look of the grain or choose an opaque color, such as white, cream, gray, black, ect., which will hide the color of the grain.

Nhance does not use paint. There is no lacquer, acrylic or latex products used. Paint grade products are not reliable in their wearability nor are they easy to clean. The NHance process provides our customers with a factory grade finish using the most researched, most developed polyurethane finishes available.

A basic renewal (no color change) usually takes one day to complete and a full color change can take a week or longer depending on the amount of cabinetry. Cost depends on the service that the customer chooses and the size and scope of the kitchen. A basic renewal for a modest sized kitchen averages $1,200 to $1,500 and a full color change for the same size kitchen will average $3,800 to $5,000.
