Siuslaw Public Library — You can read green, watch green, craft green and go green at the Siuslaw Public Library District. This year, stop by the Siuslaw Public Library's booth to see amazing crafts made from discarded library books, and then learn how to do it yourself with selections from the library's paper arts collection. The Siuslaw Public Library District can also help you and your family go green in ways you may not expect. Are you ready to build your own solar cell? Learn how at the library. Interested in turning that thrift store find into something worthy of your living room? We can help with that too. From books about greener building to salvaged art, from cleaner cleaning supplies to environmental activism, we offer dozens of books focused on greener living. The library is also your single stop for accessing free e-books and downloadable audiobooks, online magazine articles and materials that will get you online and off the paper. At the library you can even access a Speck device that monitors your indoor air quality. Stop by to learn more about the many services and materials you can access at the library. Or sign up for this year's summer reading program. Wherever you want to go, the Siuslaw Public Library can help you make the journey.

The Heat Pump Store — One of the most energy-efficient and desirable technological upgrades for electrically heated homes is the ductless heat pump, which can be used as an independent heating source or booster for other electrical heating systems including baseboard and wall heaters. You can use a ductless heat pump to replace space heaters, electrical heating systems and both indoor and outdoor heaters. Commercially available for more than 20 years, ductless technology offers distinct advantages and cost savings over duct-based pumps. Many companies manufacture ductless heat pumps, and the efficient units avoid heat losses due to cycling and ductwork inefficiencies.
