group, offering encouragement through a few words or pat on the shoulder.

Now in its 21st year, the annual Siuslaw Football Camp is as much about teaching football skills as it is about imparting life skills.

"We use the words 'respect' and 'manners' a lot during camp," says Pool, who believes practicing those qualities is an important part of the Viking tradition. "It's never too early to begin teaching kids how to have good character."

That doesn't mean the camp isn't about coaching rough and tumble football skills.

For the first-through fourth-graders, camp is about building confidence and communication skills, along with obstacle courses designed to build agility as well as a sense of accomplishment.

"These little guys are a lot of fun," says Jared Brandt, a junior on the Vikings. "They get really excited. It's hard to remember being that small."

The second group, grades five through eight, gets more intensive skills training mixed with the same core developments of respect and manners.

"We take it up a notch with the older group," Pool says. "I think for our players, they remember what it was like. Being here now, coaching these kids — it's a good experience for them.

"It's a great way to keep the traditions going."
