PeaceHealth receives grant for Palliative Care

PeaceHealth Peace Harbor Medical Center is one of only 10 critical access hospitals in the state to be awarded a grant from the Oregon Office of Rural Health to support quality-related projects.

The grant will assist in launching a new Palliative Care program at Peace Harbor, providing care to underserved individuals who are seriously ill or nearing the end of life.

Unlike traditional hospice care, it will provide patients with relief from physical and emotional suffering alongside effective medical treatments, allowing patients to take charge of their health and be fully engaged in their health-care journey.

"In 2010, there were more than 3,000 seniors in our community — that's more than 36 percent of the total population of Florence," explained Rick Yecny, chief administrative officer of Peace Harbor Medical Center. "We recognized the growing need of our community for better long-term care services and knew we needed a program to provide more accessible in-home care."

"We not only built a program that will focus on managing symptoms and stresses of those suffering, but will also help patients and families make informed decisions that reflect what's most important to them."

Though the grant will be instrumental in the new program's implementation, Yecny stressed that the project, which ensures services are provided at no cost to the patient, would not exist without the generous philanthropy of individual donors and the PeaceHealth Foundation.

"Both our community donors and our medical center are incredibly passionate about bringing better access to care to this community, and making sure it's affordable for everyone," he said.

The Palliative Care program is already offering services to select patients.

City Lights premieres dairy farm documentary

Pacific Northwest native Dr. Jan Haaken, a psychology professor and documentary filmmaker, returns to her family roots in a new film, "Milk Men: The Life and Times of Dairy Farmers," which reveals the complexities of dairy farming in the Pacific Northwest, where Haaken's grandparents once farmed.

It is a seemingly common opinion that a small, local farm is heavily preferred to the idea of the much larger "factory farm."

When Haaken heard that so many of the dairies in the area where she grew up were going under, she felt compelled to go back and learn more. What she learned will surprise audiences.

"Dairy farming emerges as a fascinating microcosm of modernity and our response to change," says Haaken, "with its intense technological and economic pressures, and its potential for rethinking indicators of progress."

The truth about the dichotomy between factory farms and the often romanticized smaller farms is far more complex than many people might think.

The documentary will premiere in Florence on Thursday, Nov. 3, beginning at 6:30 p.m. at City Lights Cinema, 1930 Highway 101.
