MILITARY MUSEUM COMPLETES MERCHANT MARINE DISPLAY

After nearly a year's efforts, the Oregon Coast Military Museum (OCMM) has completed the expanded display honoring the United States Merchant Marines.

Of the effort, past President Tim Sapp said, "This effort really started with two different supporters approaching the museum over a year ago with concerns about the lack of understanding of the role of the Merchant Marines in their heroic efforts during WWII."

The Estate of Muriel Rothwell, whose husband 'Rocky' was a WWII Merchant Mariner, wanted to leave a sizeable monetary donation to the museum, provided it did more to clarify that role, according to Sapp.

"The American Merchant Marine Veterans organization here in Oregon also approached us with the same concern," said Sapp. "They then provided significant material to help us understand that role, and develop a display to address it."

Judy Murphy, who was instrumental in creation of the life-sized dioramas that are a major part of the museum displays, was brought in to paint the backdrop mural of a raging night-time seascape, against which is set a four-foot wooden model of the SS Oregon Star, the first Liberty Ship to come off the production lines of the Kaiser Shipyards in Oregon, for the WWII effort.

In addition to the breath-taking backdrop and large ship model, the display includes information binders on other significant impacts on Oregon from the U.S. Merchant Marine efforts, such as the herculean effort to build Liberty Ships in Portland and the creation of Vanport City.

Another information binder includes the names of 79 Oregonians who served in the United States Merchant Marines who gave their lives in the service of their country, as well as the six who were interned as POW's during the war. These names were provided by the Oregon chapter of the American Merchant Marine Veterans.

Chief of Staff Geoff Cannon added, "This display has come a long way in helping us serve our mission to educate the public about this specific aspect of World War II. It really emphasizes that our Museum does cover all disciplines of military heritage."

The Museum is located at 2145 Kingwood St. in Florence, and open to the public Thursday through Saturday, from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.
