Hints For Home Buyers

Let Today's Technology Save You From 'Renophobia'

(NAPSA)—If you've been thinking, or even just dreaming, about buying a new home but "renophobia"—the fear of having to do renovations—is holding you back, you may be glad to hear two things.

1. You're not alone. Often, prospective homebuyers, particularly millennials, want a turnkey home but can't afford one in their desired area, and a fear of renovating means they remain renters. At the same time, many older homes have the potential to become a dream home with a little TLC.

2. Technological advancements can make homebuying easier and less expensive.

You can now know just what renovations and repairs a house you're considering will need, even before you visit it. That's because Inter Real Estate Services (interrealestate.com) has partnered with Kukun, an online platform offering digital solutions that help homeowners navigate the home remodeling process. Through the widget, you get real-time home renovation estimates and return on investment information for the online listings. You can see which renovations you'd like to do, how much they will cost and what the property will be worth once they're complete. You can even see which other homes in the area have had renovations and which construction companies or contractors were used.

Before you buy that fixer-upper, you can get a good idea of just how much fixing it up will cost.

What's more, there are easy-to-use tools that help home renovators manage the process from beginning to end and control the time and money involved along the way. It's simple to do. You can access the system through an app on your phone as well as the widget and get valuable data as you walk through a property.

What To Look For

While you're doing that, think about these seven things.

1. Is the building structurally sound? Look for big cracks, dampness around baseboards, and sagging walls. Check the window frames for cracked paint. Look at the ceiling for cracks, flaky plaster or water stains.

2. Are the rooms and closets big enough? Are there enough bathrooms? Are the ceilings a good height for you? Will your family and furniture fit comfortably?

3. Inspect the plumbing. Check the water pressure. Turn on all the faucets and flush all the toilets. See whether the pipes are insulated and make sure they're not lead. Look under the sinks for leaks, water damage or mold.

4. Check out the basement and the attic. How easy is access? Is there much storage space? Could it be converted into extra rooms? Is there insulation?

5. Learn about the neighborhood. How are the schools? How close is shopping? What's the transportation like in the area? Is it under a flight path?

6. Look to the layout. How easy is it to get from room to room and from indoors to out?

7. It's a hot idea to be sure the heating and cooling systems work.

Pointers For Parents

Help Your Kid Say No To Underage Drinking

(NAPSA)—How do you prepare your child with the knowledge, skills and confidence to say no to alcohol? The task can seem challenging, but you as a parent or caregiver do not have to feel powerless. You can take action to help your child make healthy decisions that prevent underage drinking.

While the rates are declining, alcohol is the most widely misused substance among America's youth and underage drinking remains a serious concern in the U.S. The 2016 Report to Congress on the Prevention and Reduction of Underage Drinking finds that youth start drinking at an early age. Although the peak years of underage drinking happen from 7th to 11th grade, 10 percent of 9- to 10-year-olds have already started drinking and nearly one-fifth of underage drinkers begin before age 13.

The report also finds that any alcohol use can have serious consequences for young people. It contributes to risky sexual behavior and increases the risk of suicide and using other drugs. It can negatively impact brain development, which can have lifelong effects. It can increase the risk for heavy drinking later in life. And underage drinking can result in arrest or, worse yet, death from drunk driving or alcohol poisoning.

So what's behind this issue? There are many reasons young people are tempted to drink, including peer pressure. Underage drinking typically happens in a group, and for adolescents the desire to fit in is powerful. Other risk factors include having a history of social and emotional problems, such as depression, and a family history of substance abuse. Trying to cope with difficult life transitions, such as divorce in the family or moving from middle to high school, can also trigger underage drinking.

The first-ever Surgeon General's Report on Alcohol, Drugs, and Health shows how parents are a leading influence in a child's decision about whether to drink.

Spending time with your children can prevent underage drinking.

How Parents Can Help

1. Be a positive role model. Children learn from observing and that starts at home. Don't let your child see you misuse alcohol or drugs, and get help if you think you have a substance use problem. Even if you have misused drugs or alcohol in the past, you can still have an open conversation about their dangers and the reasons to stay away from them. In addition, keep temptation away by safeguarding alcohol and medications at home so they are not accessible to your child.

2. Strengthen family bonds. Be involved in your child's life and spend more time together. Show interest in your child's activities and plan ones you can do together based on their interests, such as attending sports games or having family movie or game nights. Know your child's daily routine in and out. Get to know your child's friends and friends' parents, so you can share your rules about not allowing any form of alcohol or substance use.

3. Encourage your child to get involved in extracurricular activities. In the same way, support your child's involvement in school clubs, such as debate or yearbook, team sports or other outside interests. Doing so will help build your child's confidence, respect, leadership, sportsmanship and ability to work with others. Also, keeping your child engaged in positive activities helps avoid the chance that idle time is filled with potentially dangerous behavior.

4. Balance your child's independence with safe boundaries. Provide daily encouragement to your child to boost self-esteem and confidence. Find ways for your child to have more responsibility in family life, such as doing chores or caring for a younger sibling. Set clear expectations, including about alcohol and drug use. Create a pledge between you and your child that commits your child to not drink or use drugs.

5. Talk to your children regularly about alcohol. Young people are more likely to listen when they know you're on their side. Try to reinforce why you don't want your child to drink—not just because you say so but because you want them to be happy and safe. The conversation will go a lot better if you're working with, and not against, your child. Keep it low key. Don't worry about getting everything across in one talk. Many small talks are better.

Help for Parents
If you are worried your child may be involved with alcohol or drugs, it's important to seek professional guidance. Your pediatrician can be a first-stop resource.

There are also many online resources to help you better understand the issue of underage drinking and talk to and encourage your kid to stay away from alcohol. The Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) has underage drinking prevention resources specifically for parents and caregivers at www.samhsa.gov/underage-drinking. This includes access to SAMHSA's free app for parents called "Talk. They Hear You" to help prepare you to talk to your kid about underage drinking through practice drills.

By being proactive and following the suggestions described here, you can help strengthen your child's resistance to alcohol. Take the first step by making the commitment to talk together today.
