Letters from 1B

STATUES GLORIFY HISTORY — OF SLAVERY
Memorials to those who fought the war to defend slavery are historic. However, in light of the Union prevailing in the Civil War, they should not be allowed on public property. This solution would mean the public properties that were “given” the monuments should return them. Those groups can display them someplace where those interested in the history or the art can avail themselves of the opportunity.

On the other hand, those who suffered racial injustice ought not be reminded of the Confederate leaders as they go about their civic duties in public buildings. And much less should they feel these individuals are glorified.
—Mary Lehman Florence
NOTHING COULD BE CLEARER
In the editor’s opinion piece “Sign on Hwy 101....” (Aug. 19), he wrote about “...the selectively ambiguous words of our President.”

The President condemned violent groups.
Both sides.
Nothing could be clearer.
Assuming he started condemnations by name on the extreme right, how far left would he have to iterate denunciations by name to be unambiguous?
Would it have been enough to stop at that liberal bastion, the ACLU which supported Unite the Right in their suit to have their permit reinstated?

—Ian Eales Florence

FABRICATED PRETENSE OF CIVILITY
The character of our contemporary and future culture depends, in part, on the extent to which we let Trump-era near-white supremacists and science-deniers misdirect our attention.
If they want to celebrate the fact that Oregon, as a new state, had significant racist credentials — it did not finally ratify the 14th Amendment until the 1970s — it speaks to what their values are.

If they want to merely ignore those facts and perpetuate historical refuges for such lynching mindsets, it speaks even more strongly to how their intense sense of fabricated pretense is incapable of appreciating basic ideas of civility.
—Rand Dawson Siltcoos Lake
